He alleges in his petition that appellants were the [trustees] of [common] school district No. 6, and that it had been legally determined that a schoolhouse should be erected and furnished; that there was [not] [enough] money under the control of the defendants, as trustees, for this [purpose], and that they borrowed and used the money for which the notes were [executed] for the purpose of erecting and furnishing a schoolhouse; that it [was] [their] [duty] as trustees to levy and have collected a tax sufficient to have paid or discharged these notes, but that they had failed and refused to do so, and charges that in consequence of such dereliction on their part they were personally bound to him for the money so borrowed, and asked a personal judgment therefor and for all proper relief.

The defendants filed a general demurrer to plaintiff's petition, which was not acted upon, but it was adjudged that plaintiff's petition be taken for confessed, and personal judgments were rendered against each of the defendants on both of the obligations at the May term, 1901, of the McCracken Circuit Court. At the following September term of the court the defendants moved the court to set aside the judgment on the ground that it was prematurely entered under section 517 of the Civil Code. And at the same time they tendered and offered to file their answer, in which they allege in substance that they were the trustees of common school district No. 6; that the county superintendent had notified them that the schoolhouse had been condemned, and that the furniture therein was insufficient; that there were no funds in their hands available for erecting a new schoolhouse or making necessary repairs, and that the money for which the notes sued on were executed was borrowed for the use and benefit of the district pursuant to the authority conferred upon them by section 4440 of the statutes; that with full knowledge of the facts plaintiff loaned to them the money as school trustees, and not in their individual capacity; that in the year 1896 they levied a capitation tax on each white male citizen in the district over twenty-one years of age of $1 and an ad valorem tax of 25 cents on each $100 worth of property for four years; and that as long as they were trustees of the district the tax so levied was collected and applied to the erection and equipping of the schoolhouse for the district; that their terms as trustees expired in the year 1897, and they were not trustees for the years 1898, 1899 or 1900, but that at the date on which their answer was filed they were again in office and would make every effort to collect the money to pay the plaintiff's debt. They also charge that the words, "we, or either of us, promise to pay," were inserted in the note by mistake and oversight of the draughtsman, and that it was never intended or understood, either by them or by the plaintiff, that they were in any event to be personally bound therefor; but that they were executed and accepted as the obligations of the common school district. The motion of defendants to vacate the judgment and file their answer were both overruled, and they have appealed.

The judgment of the lower court must be reversed for two reasons: First, it was erroneous for the trial court to have rendered a judgment by default against a defendant who had filed a demurrer to the petition and which remained undisposed of. (Black on Judgments, volume 1, section 86; En. Pl. & Pr., volume 6, page 80; Grady v. Prewitt, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 506.) Besides, it seems to us that the language of the obligations sued on conclusively shows that the makers did not intend to promise in their individual capacity. They show that the money was to be expended in the erection of a schoolhouse for the district, and the promise, both in the body of the instruments and in their signature thereto, is in their official capacity. It is difficult to understand how they could have used more explicit language. But even if we are mistaken in this construction of the language employed, there can be no doubt that the answer tendered by the defendants set out a complete and valid defense thereto, and one that is not at all inconsistent with the rational interpretation of the note. We are supported in this conclusion by Yowell v. Dodd, 66 Ky., 58, and the authorities there cited. In Pack, &c. v. White, 78 Ky., 243, White sued Pack, &c., upon an obligation which reads as follows: "Twelve months after date we, the directors of the Big Eagle and Harrison County Turnpike Co., promise to pay to the order of Mrs. Mary E. White the sum of $1,500 for value received, negotiable and payable without defalcation or discount at the Branch Bank of the Farmer's Bank at Georgetown, with interest at the rate of 8 per cent. from date until paid."

•

The notes were signed by the defendants as individuals. In that case the defendants were held liable as individuals, the court saying: "There is nothing on the face of the paper showing that the money was to be applied for the benefit of the corporation, or to discharge a debt due by it. The corporate name embodied in a note may imply that the corporation was interested in some manner in the consideration, but to make it liable on the obligation it must be averred and proven that it was executed and received as the obligation of the company, and by mutual mistake the parties failed to use language creating the liability. This is the proper test in determining the liability of the parties upon the face of an instrument like this."

The notes sued on show on their face that the money borrowed was to be used to build a schoolhouse for the benefit of the district, and it appears from the averments, both of the petition and answer, that the plaintiff knew the purpose for which the money was borrowed, and that it had been so applied. Under section 4440 of the Kentucky Statutes appellants were not only authorized to borrow money to build or repair the district schoolhouse after its condemnation by the county superintendent, but were liable to be indicted and fined for failing to do so. But for the use of the words "we, or either of us," in the obligations sued on the demurrer filed by the defendants should have been sustained, and in the answer tendered by them it is plead that these words were used by mistake of the draughtsman. With this correction, we think that the pleadings conclusively show that it was understood by both parties that the obligation was that of the district, and not of the individual defendants.

For reasons indicated the judgment is reversed and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

---

McDOWELL, &c. v. McDOWELL, &c.

(Filed April 28, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Cancellation of conveyance—M. owned a farm and he and his wife being old and needing attention, made a deed conveying the land to his son and the wife of M., in consideration that the son would care for both of them during their lives. After several months both parties became dissatisfied with the arrangement and the son agreed to reconvey the property, but before the deed could be made M. shot himself. Afterwards his widow and a daughter brought this suit to cancel the deed. The lower court granted the relief prayed for, and this appeal is prosecuted. Held—That this court is disposed to give some weight to the finding of the chancellor, and it seems to be a fair and equitable adjustment of the trouble, and will not, therefore, be disturbed.

Nat W. Halstead for appellants.

Twynan & Handley for appellees.

Appeal from Larue Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson.

Peter McDowell owned a farm in Larue county worth about $4,000. He had two children, Alonzo McDowell and Sarah Sowers. He had been twice married. The children were by his first wife. He was quite advanced in years; his wife, who was some sixty odd years of age, was addicted to the morphine habit, and by reason of his feebleness and her habits, in January, 1899, they made a deed to the farm to his son, Alonzo McDowell, and wife in consideration that they would furnish them a home and take care of them as long as they lived. He put an addition to his house and they moved over. In the following spring the old lady became somewhat dissatisfied, and there is some proof that later the old gentleman also complained. In April, 1900, neither party being pleased with the arrangement, it was agreed between them mutually that Alonzo McDowell and his wife would deed back the farm of his father, and the father would pay him $200 for board up to that time. The deed would have been made, but Mrs. McDowell was sick and could not acknowledge it. On the following Monday the old people arranged to return home, and on Sunday night Peter McDowell shot himself. Two weeks after this the widow left Alonzo's house, and a few days later she and Sarah Sowers and the latter's husband filed this suit to cancel the deed. On final hearing the circuit court cancelled the deed, and Alonzo McDowell appeals.

Our rule is to give considerable weight to the chancellor's finding on questions of this sort, for the reason that the chancellor is on the ground and his conclusions of fact in the exercise of his discretion should not be disturbed in matters of doubt. We attach no importance to the proof for appellees, that the deed was obtained from Mrs. McDowell when she was under the influence of opium. On the contrary, we are satisfied from all the circumstances the contract was deliberately and fairly made. We are also satisfied that Alonzo McDowell in making the contract was prompted by the motive of advancing his father's happiness in his declining years, and that he was largely actuated by the same motive in agreeing to rescind the contract. We are also satisfied from the proof that he and his wife tried in good faith to carry out their contract. But still the fact remains that after fifteen months' trial neither party to this contract was satisfied with it, and both were willing for it to terminate. From this fact, and all the circumstances shown by the evidence, we are constrained to the conclusion that the home at Alonzo McDowell's, by reason of the old lady's unfortunate habits and some other facts not necessary to be mentioned, had become such as the contract did not contemplate, and both parties realized that their happiness depended on a rescission of it. The purpose of the arrangement was to give the old people a home. There can be no real home when the spirit of peace has departed and unkindness takes its place. The agreement of the parties to rescind the contract is conclusive confirmation of the proof for appellees as to the state of feeling then existing between the parties, and under this state of feeling the best thing for them was to terminate the arrangement. Such a state of feeling was sufficient reason for rescinding the conveyance.

The court left appellant in possession of the rents of the property during the time he held it. It also left him in possession of a mule worth about $100 and the wheat drill. It seems to us that these were sufficient compensation for what he was out in the way of boarding the old people, and on the whole case we see no reason for disturbing the chancellor's judgment. Equality is equity; after the son is paid for the board furnished the father and his wife substantial justice is done as between the son and daughter when the estate is equally divided between them, after setting apart to the widow her share under the law. It is true the judgment complained of gives the widow less than she would have got under the deed, but this is of her own seeking, and of it she does not complain. We see nothing in the record to indicate that she is not competent to manage her own affairs and make an election for herself. In excluding the deposition of Mrs. Bell McDowell the circuit court followed Covington v. Geyler, 98 Ky., 275, and this ruling was not prejudicial to appellant, for the reason that there was nothing new in her testimony and the admission of her deposition could not have affected the result.

Judgment affirmed.

---

HUFF, &c. v. MINIARD, &c.

(Filed April 28, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Title—Patents—Evidence—This action was instituted by appellees to recover of appellants logs cut from a 100-acre tract of land alleged to be of the value of $408. Appellees claim title to said land under deed made to them by A., who claims to be the patentee, while appellants claim same from B., the father of A., and who made the survey and obtained the patent in his own name and under whom appellants claim as heirs of a vendee by regular conveyances from B. A. claims that B. had the survey made for him, and the patent was made to the father instead of the son by mistake. The presumption is that the survey and patent were made in the name of the father, as they show on their faces, and the testimony of the son after the death of the father, and after the son had assigned his interest, as to the declarations of the father is incompetent. After possession held under title from B., since 1844, appellant's title will not be disturbed, and appellees are entitled to recover nothing from them. The proof in the record is sufficient that the 100-acre survey in controversy was included in the general description of a large body of land conveyed by B.

Jas. H. Jeffries and Wm. Lewis for appellants.

H. C. Faulkner for appellees.

Appeal from Leslie Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson.

On December 4, 1844, William Turner, of Harlan county, made a survey of 100 acres of land, which was carried into grant on July 2, 1845. The survey describes the land as lying in Harlan county on Turner's creek of Creasy Fork. On March 3, 1857, William Turner and John S. Turner by deed conveyed to Robert Turner "a certain farm, composed of various tracts of land situated in the county and State aforesaid, consisting of about 700 acres, beginning on a sycamore standing on the south bank of the Creasy river; thence running so as to include all the various tracts of land owned by the said William Turner and John S. Turner on both sides of said Creasy river." Eli Huff, the ancestor of appellants, got the land from Robert Turner or his heirs, who made him a deed for it. Eli Huff lived on the farm for a number of years, and finding that the 100-acre survey above referred to did not adjoin the other land, took out a patent for the intervening land, so as to get all his land in one boundary. After this he died in the year 1893, leaving appellants in possession as his heirs at law.

William Turner had a son named William Turner, who in 1844 was some five or ten years old, and this son, on September 14, 1895, for an alleged consideration of $450, conveyed the hundred acres above referred to to appellee, John B. Miniard. The real consideration of the deed was $30. And it was not recorded until March 25, 1899. On March 20, 1899, Miniard and John M. Bailey, to whom he had conveyed an interest in the land, instituted this action to recover for 136 poplar logs cut by appellants from the land, alleged to be of value $408. On the trial of the case the court fixed the value of the logs at $222.41, and entered a judgment to the effect that the plaintiffs had shown themselves to have the better right to the land from which the timber in controversy was cut, and it was, therefore, adjudged that the plaintiffs recover of the defendants the value of the timber, $222.41, and their costs.

It is insisted for appellees that as there was no demand made on the court for a separation of the conclusions of law from the findings of fact, the judgment of the court on all questions raised by the pleadings must be treated as the verdict of a properly instructed jury. This is true, but the judgment of the court is in substance a finding of fact in favor of the plaintiffs' title, and it is insisted for appellant that this finding is palpably against the evidence.

The only ground upon which William Turner, Jr., who made the deed to Miniard in March, 1895, claimed title to the land was that his father, William Turner, Sr., made the survey and obtained the grant in his name and for him. The proof shows that William Turner, Jr., was about ten years old at the time this survey was made, if we take his statement as to his age; or some five years younger, if we fix his age by that of another man, who, he says, was older than he. The surveyor who made the survey says that it was made by William Turner, the father. There is nothing in the record of the survey or patent to indicate that it was made in the name of William Turner, Jr. The presumption is that the William Turner therein named is the William Turner who had the survey made and obtained the patent. This legal presumption, after the lapse of half a century and the death of all the parties, can not be overthrown but by the clearest evidence. The only proof to sustain the conclusion of the circuit court are some alleged declarations of William Turner proved by William Turner, Jr., and the father of plaintiff Miniard, to the effect that he intended the land for William Turner, Jr., and had the survey made and the patent issued in his name, but this evidence, so far as testified to by William Turner, Jr., is incompetent, as he can no testify for himself as to the declarations of his father, and by the provisions of the Code his competency in this respect is not affected by his assignment of his interest in the land to another; and waiving this, we are clearly of the opinion that such evidence can not overturn the record after the death of all the parties under the circumstances shown in the case. William Turner, Jr., asserted no right to the land in the lifetime of his father, or Robert Turner, his vendee, or Eli Huff, who bought the land when it was sold to settle the estate of Robert Turner. In fact, so far as appears, for something over thirty years, he acquiesced in the claim of Huff and Robert Turner to this land, and in 1895 he conveyed away to Minlard the tract for $30, putting in the deed an alleged consideration of $450.

The land has valuable timber upon it, and his sale of it for $30 is in keeping with his previous conduct showing that he had no title to it. If the title to land could be destroyed by such proof no confidence could be placed in record titles. A question is also made as to whether the deed from William Turner to Robert Turner covered this 100-acre survey. The purpose of the deed on its face was to convey all the land of William Turner on Creasy Fork. Neither William Turner, nor any of his children, have set up any claim to the land. The claim of William Turner, Jr., is not made as the heir of his father, but on the idea that he was the patentee. If this body of land had not at the time been understood to be included in the deed which William Turner made, it is incredible that none of the parties in interest should have set up claim to it or looked after it. The acquiescence in Huff's claim of the land for so many years, and until after his death, as well as the death of William and Robert Turner, is a practical construction of the deed which can not now be disregarded.

On the admitted facts the judgment of the circuit court is not sustained by sufficient evidence, and it is, therefore, reversed and the cause remanded with directions to grant appellant a new trial.

---

BEDFORD-BOWLING GREEN STONE CO., &c. v. OMAN, &c.

(Filed April 28, 1903.)

Contracts—Leases—Common carrier—Conveyances—The original vendors of the appellant, Bedford-Bowling Green Stone Co. and John Oman owned or leased the land or privilege of quarrying valuable cutting stone from same, and in order to facilitate the transportation of stone and necessary machinery to and from the quarries, built a switch railroad about three and one half miles in length to connect with the L. & N. R. R. Co., and made a transportation contract with it. Subsequently it was agreed that the said railroad company should operate, control and keep said switch road and furnish transportation for the stone company. Appellee Oman subsequently became the purchaser of a one-third interest in the quarries at a judicial sale of the interest of a former interest, and this share was divided off and set apart to him by commissioners appointed by the court. In this action Oman claims to be a part owner in the railroad switch and as such entitled to require the L. & N. R. R. Co. to furnish him transportation to and from his quarry, and seeks to enjoin appellant, Bowling Green Stone Co., who own the other two thirds interest in said quarries, from interfering with its hts. Held—That under his purchase appellee Oman acquired no rights to the switch railroad as it has virtually become a part of the system of the railroad company, and is under obligation to transport stone and machinery for said Oman only as a common carrier, to and from reasonable points along the line at which appellee may lawfully ship or receive it. Although the part of the tract of land on which the switch road now lies is owned by appellant, the Bedford-Bowling Green Stone Co., yet the right to take the cutting stone which belongs to appellee Oman necessarily carries with it such reasonable use of the surface over the land as is necessary to make the interest of Oman in the land available.

Bodley, Baskin & Morancy and John E. DuBose for B.-B. G. Stone Co.

Jas. E. Mitchell, Mitchell & DuBose, E. W. Hines, B. D. Warfield and Thos. B. Harrison, Jr., for L. & N. R. R. Co.

L. McQuown for appellees.

Appeal from Warren Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

This action involves the rights of appellees to the use of a railroad which runs from the Memphis Junction of the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co.'s line in Warren county, Kentucky, about three and a half miles, to the quarry of the appellant, Bedford-Bowling Green Stone Co.

It is not necessary, for the purpose of this case, to set forth the statements in the pleadings with any minute particularity. It is sufficient to say that the Bedford-Bowling Green Stone Co. claims to be the exclusive owner of the switch in question, and, on the other hand, the appellees claim a part ownership, with the right to its use; and if that be not so, that it is a part of the railroad system of the appellant, Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co., and as such they have the right of shipment over it; and that the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. has no legal right, as a common carrier, to refuse to transport freight along its line; and that the pleadings properly present these issues for adjudication.

Upon the trial below the learned chancellor held that the appellants were part owners of the switch in question, and enjoined the Bedford-Bowling Green Stone Co from interfering with their rights to its use, and required, by a mandatory injunction, the appellant, Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co., to transport appellees' freight over it to their quarry, at, or near, the end of the line. From this judgment an appeal has been prosecuted to this court.

In 1870 Hugh F. Smith and his wife, Lydia A. Smith, were the owners in fee simple of a tract of land in Warren county, Kentucky, known as the Howarth tract; and they and one B. C. Sanders, together, owned the perpetual right to quarry the fine cutting stone in an adjoining tract known as the Loving land. Smith and wife owned an undivided two-thirds interest and B. C. Sanders an undivided one-third interest. Sanders had no interest in the Howarth land.

On the 22d day of January, 1870, Smith and wife and B. C. Sanders entered into a written lease with Owen, McDonald & Co., whereby they leased to them for a term of thirty years the right to work and to use all the fine cutting stone contained on the two tracts of land. In consideration of this lease Owen, McDonald & Co. bound themselves to build, or cause to be built, within three years from the date of the lease, a railroad for the quarry on the land to the Memphis branch of the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co., and to commence operations in the quarry within three years from the date of the lease; and it was stipulated that unless this was done the lease was to be null and void. Owen, McDonald & Co. were also to pay to the lessors, as a royalty, $1 for each 100 feet of all stone suitable for cutting or dressing quarried by the lessees during the term of the lease, and covenanted to keep their books open to the inspection of the lessors, so that they might settle between themselves as to their rights in the royalty. At the expiration of the term of the lease it was stipulated that the lessees could remove all the tools and machinery, unless the lessors paid a fair price for them.

Afterwards Owen, McDonald & Co. conveyed their interest in the lease to the White Stone Quarry Co., which acquired the right of way from the stone quarry to the Memphis Junction of the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co., and built thereon the railroad switch involved in this litigation; since which time the interests originally acquired by Owen, McDonald & Co. have passed in regular succession from the White Stone Quarry Co. to the Belknap & Dumesnil Stone Co., and from it to the Bowling Green Stone Co., and from it to the Columbia Finance and Trust Co., which conveyed it to the Bedford-Bowling Green Stone Co.

In 1888 the Belknap and Dumesnil Stone Co. purchased all the interests of the Smiths in both the Howarth and the Loving tracts, and thus became the owner in fee simple of the first, and the owner of a two-thirds interest in the cutting stone in the latter tract.

In 1878, B. C. Sanders being indebted to Milton Feland and McElwain, conveyed to them his interest in the cutting stone in the Loving tract. Feland having died, in a suit to settle his estate, his interest in the cutting stone was sold, and bought by appellee John Oman. McElwain, in 1883, sold his interest in the cutting stone to Sallie M. Smith, and she sold it to the Belknap and Dumesnil Stone Co. in 1888, so that at the expiration of the lease in 1900 John Oman was the owner of a one-third interest in the cutting stone in the Loving tract, and the Bedford-Bowling Green Stone Co. was the owner, in fee simple, of the Howarth tract, and of an undivided two-thirds interest in the cutting stone in the Loving tract. Between them, and in the proportions mentioned, they were the owners of all the property demised by the lease of 1870.

After the expiration of the lease the Columbia Finance and Trust Co., appellants' vendor, and the appellee, John Oman, in an action that was pending in the Warren Circuit Court, etc., entered into an agreement, by which that case was settled, and a division made between the parties at interest as to their rights in the cutting stone in the Loving tract. In pursuance of this agreement commissioners were appointed to divide the interests of the parties in the cutting stone, which having been made, the commissioner of the court conveyed to each party to the settlement their respective portions. This deed having been put to record, there is now no dispute as to the rights of the parties to this litigation on this question. John Oman having opened a quarry on the Loving tract, set apart to him, very near the quarry operated by the Bedford-Bowling Green Stone Co., is naturally very anxious to use the switch in transporting his machinery to his quarry, and in transporting his stone to the main line of the Louisville & Nashville R. R., it being impracticable to haul such heavy freight for so long a distance in any other way.

We do not think, however, he has any interest in the switch in question; it was built by the White Stone Quarry Co., a remote vendor of appellants, under the lease of 1870, and that instrument contains no covenant for its conveyance to the lessors at its expiration; at which time, being a part of the realty, in the absence of any stipulation governing the matter, it became the property of the owners of the soil to which it was affixed.

In order for appellee Oman to prove himself entitled to an interest in the railroad switch involved in this litigation, it was incumbent upon him to exhibit some muniment of title by which he acquired an interest in it; this he has wholly failed to do. Even should it be held that his remote vendor, B. C. Sanders, acquired an interest by the terms of the lease of 1870, it would still be necessary for him to show some transmission of that right to him. He purchased the interest he holds at a judicial sale in the settlement of Milton Feland's estate, and the deed of the commissioner of the court in that case to him, after describing the land containing the cutting stone to be conveyed, contains this stipulation: "That which is conveyed is the interest of M. C. Feland in the cutting stone on the land aforesaid, being one third-interest." So that all he purchased was an interest in the cutting stone, and not an interest in the railroad switch. The railroad switch involved in this litigation was built by the White Stone Quarry Co., and in so doing they entered into a contract with the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co., by which it leased, or hired, all of the material which went into it, from the railroad company, upon a stipulated rent, to be equal to 6 per cent. per annum on the value of the material furnished; the quarry company to keep the roadway in good condition, either by doing the work themselves or paying the railroad company for what it might do in this regard.

Afterwards, on the 23d day of May, 1893, the property having passed into the ownership of the Bowling Green Stone Co., a new contract was made between it and the railroad company, in which all of the terms and conditions of the original contract concerning material furnished by the railroad company, and the rental therefor due from the quarry company, were recited; and further, that, "whereas, said Bowling Green Stone Co. wishes to increase its business, and has represented to said Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. that if it should be relieved from the payment of said rent and for said repairs, it could largely increase its business, which would result in an increase of traffic for said Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises, the said Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co., from and after this date, releases the said Bowling Green Stone Co. from the payment of rent on said material, and also agrees to keep said track in repair during the continuation of this contract without cost to said Bowling Green Stone Co., reserving the right, however, to discontinue doing so and the right to cancel this contract on sixty days' notice in writing to said Bowling Green Stone Co. whenever and at any time, in the opinion of the management of said Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co., the shipments from said quarries to points on and reached via said Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co.'s lines are not sufficient to justify the maintenance of the track by said Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co."

This contract, and other evidence in the record bearing upon the question, shows that the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co., during the continuance of this last contract, has the control and management of the railroad switch; it owns, controls and operates the engines and other rolling stock which passes over the line; it keeps the roadbed in repair, and owns all of the material which goes into it. So far as this record shows it exercises the same control and dominion over this line that it does over any other part of its system, and we think, by the terms of the contract in question, the switch, during the continuance of the contract, at least, becomes a part of the general system of the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. This being so, it can not lawfully refuse to receive and transport freight belonging to appellees to and from such reasonable points along the line at which they may lawfully ship or receive it.

This is clearly settled by the opinion of this court in the case of the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Pittsburg and Kanawha Coal Co., 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1818, in which it is said "railroad companies are quasi public corporations, created for the purpose of exercising the functions and performing the duties of common carriers. These duties are defined by law, and in accepting their charters they necessarily take with them all the duties and liabilities annexed; and they are required to supply to the extent of their resources adequate facilities for the transaction of all business offered, and to deal fairly and impartially with their patrons. (McCoy v. C., I., St. L. & C. R. R. Co., 18 Fed. Rep., 5; Mun v. Illinois, 94 U. S., 126.) And they have no right to contract with a corporation or individual to give exclusive rights to transfer any commodity over any part of their line. * * * The contention is made for the railroad company that appellee is not entitled to a mandatory injunction requiring them to fulfill their corporate obligations to furnish impartial service, because they have adequate relief in a court of law by suit to recover damages for the wrong done. Undoubtedly this remedy exists, but it is not the only means of relief which the law provides. By accepting its charter the railroad company assumed obligations to the public, and the duty of enforcing these obligations, in the absence of some statute providing a different remedy, necessarily devolves upon courts of equity. Their jurisdiction to grant relief of this sort has been well established and defined. (Hays v. Penn. Co., 12 Fed., 309; also the express case, decided by Justice Miller and Judge McCreary, 10 Fed. Rep., 869; and the case of the State v. The Hartford & New Haven R. R. Co., 29 Con., 546.) It is plainly laid down in these and other cases that a railway company may be compelled by a mandatory injunction to carry out the object for which they were created, and to impartially and without discrimination serve the public."

While it is the duty of the railroad company thus to receive and transfer freight for appellee, this can be done only at points along the line of the railroad switch in question, at which appellee may lawfully receive or ship it; he has no right to trespass upon the private property of appellants in order to reach the road.

We think, under his right to the cutting stone as now fixed by contract, appellee is entitled to ship and receive freight at any reasonable point along the road as now constructed, which lies upon any part of the Loving tract, which was set apart and conveyed to him in the settlement had between him and the Columbia Finance and Trust Co. Although the part of the Loving tract upon which the railroad switch lies (being No. 4 on the plat) is now owned in fee by appellants, Bedford-Bowling Green Stone Co., the right to take the cutting stone which belongs to appellee necessarily carries with it such reasonable use of the surface over the stone as is necessary to make appellees' interest in the land available.

If it should be found impracticable, from the topography of the land, to reach the railroad on tract No. 4, then appellees may acquire the right of way by contract with appellants, or condemnation, under section 815 of the Kentucky Statutes, to any practicable point on the line, which will not unnecessarily interfere with appellants' quarry as now operated.

For the reasons herein given this case is affirmed as to the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co., and reversed as to the Bedford-Bowling Green Stone Co., for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Whole court sitting, except Judge Settle.

---

ZENDER, &c. v. BARBER ASPHALT PAVING CO.

(Filed April 28, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Street improvements—In this action to enforce a lien on property for the improvement of the carriage way of Baxter avenue from the former boundary line of Louisville to the center of Transit avenue, appellants, property owners, contend that they should not be assessed for this improvement as their property contiguous to the improvement is bounded by principal streets and lies within a square. Held—That said property is bound for the cost of the improvement as the apportionment as made is about as fair as if the charge was made against the quarter squares.

Lane & Harrison for appellants.

Wm. Furlong for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Burnam.

The appellee, the Barber Asphalt Paving Co., constructed the carriage way of Baxter avenue from the former city boundary line to the center line of Transit avenue under an ordinance approved on the 21st day of August, 1899, at the cost of the owners of the ground on the northeasterly side of Baxter avenue from the old city boundary line to Transit avenue, and extending back to a line midway between Baxter avenue and East Broadway, and on the southeasterly side of Baxter avenue from the former city boundary line to Transit avenue, and extending back in a line midway between Baxter avenue and Von Borries avenue. And this action was brought by them to enforce a lien on the property for the amount due for the work as shown by apportionment warrants issued by the board of public works. The appellants are property holders, against whom the cost of the improvement was adjudged by the common pleas division of the Jefferson Circuit Court. They allege in their answer that prior to the passage of the ordinance on January 1, 1899, Baxter avenue, East Broadway, Highland avenue, Transit avenue, Von Borries avenue, Reble avenue and Hepburn avenue, were, and each has since continued to be and is now, a principal street of the city of Louisville. Their situation is shown in the diagram filed with this opinion, marked A, and which was filed with the deposition of Anton Zender. It will be seen from this diagram that Baxter avenue runs nearly east and west, and Highland and Transit avenues nearly north and south. The old city boundary line from which the improvement begins runs from a point about midway between Highland and Transit avenues through what would be the center of Hepburn avenue if it were extended to Baxter avenue. East Broadway lies about 394 feet north of Baxter avenue and parallel with it. Whilst Von Borries avenue lies south of Baxter avenue a distance of about 234 feet. Prior to the passage of the ordinance in question both Baxter and Von Borries avenues had to be paved with asphalt from Highland avenue to the old city boundary line at the expense of the abutting holders. North of Baxter avenue is a regular square, formed by Baxter, Highland and Transit avenue and East Broadway. Whilst a somewhat irregular square is formed on the south side of Baxter, by Baxter, Von Borries, Transit and Highland avenues. The ordinance directing the improvement charges that the cost should be apportioned on the north side of Baxter avenue from the old city boundary line to Transit avenue, and extend half way back to East Broadway, and on the south side from the old city boundary line to Transit avenue, extending half way back to Von Borries avenue. The only question involved on the appeal is as to the validity of this apportionment. Appellants contend that as the property contiguous to the improvement is bounded by principal streets and lies within a square, that the general council had no power to determine the depth to which the assessment for the improvement should extend on the adjacent property; that the statute in all such cases charged the cost of the improvement to the adjacent quarter square; and it must be admitted that it is the correct rule as laid down by numerous adjudications of this court. But as a matter of fact, the apportionment as made is practically against the land in the quarter squares in which the improvement was made and against the property actually receiving the benefit thereof, and the cost of the improvement could not with any propriety have been assessed against the property west of the old city boundary line, because that property had already been charged with its fair proportion of the cost of improving Baxter avenue.

Appellants have failed to show that they would have been required to pay any less sum if the cost had been assessed against the quarter square than under the method adopted. We, therefore, conclude that no sufficient ground for the reversal of the judgment complained of had been pointed out.

It is, therefore, affirmed.

The Kentucky Law Reporter

---

VOL. 24.

JUNE 1, 1903.

No. 23

---

[Reported by Wm. Cromwell, Esq., of the Frankfort, Ky., Bar.]

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

STRONG v. SOUTH, &c.

(Filed April 28, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Title—In this controversy between appellant and appellees as to the ownership of a large tract of land it is adjudged that appellees' ancestor purchased and held a better title than appellant. The finding of the chancellor will be given some weight.

J. B. Marcum and T. T. Cope for appellant.

White & Ray, D. B. Redwine and W. W. Vaughn for appellees.

Appeal from Breathitt Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson.

A survey was made for George T. Cotton in the year 1812 for 23,189 acres of land, known as the Pickett and Marshall tract. Both the parties to this case claim under Cotton. Appellant's title is derived in this way: On July 21, 1846, George T. Cotton and others united in a deed to George H. Ketchum for the land. On March 10, 1847, Ketchum conveyed it, with a quantity of other property, to Ulysses Turner in trust for the payment of certain debts. On September 21, 1850, Ulysses Turner, in consideration of $500 in hand paid, sold appellant, E. C. Strong, all the right and title which he or Ketchum had in the unsold portion of this tract; but the land that had been previously sold was excepted out of this sale.

Appellee's title is derived in this way: Appellees are the heirs of J. W. South, who died in the year 1830. The land in controversy lies on Fish Trap branch, above a large white oak and runs with the top of the ridge around the headwaters of Fish Trap back to a point opposite the white oak. This land was conveyed on November 23, 1850, by A. B. Patrick and wife to J. W. South and A. P. Williams in consideration of $1,400 in hand paid, and on January 14, 1873, Granville Smith and wife, in consideration of $1,500 paid, conveyed to J. W. South their undivided half of the tract, this being the interest of A. P. Williams under the former deed, as we understand it. Patrick got the land from James Stidham, and Stidham from Alexander Strong, on July 19, 1847. The proof for appellees shows that the Breathitt county courthouse was burned about the year 1872, and the deeds back of the two referred to are not, therefore, produced, although it is shown that they were duly recorded. Stidham testifies that after he bought out Alexander Strong and paid him $100 for his interest in the land he finished paying George Cotton for the land and received a deed, which was recorded. This testimony is confirmed by the fact that Ketchum witnessed the transfer from Alexander Strong to Stidham. It is also confirmed by evidence showing that Stidham worked for Ketchum on boats to pay for the land; that he settled on the land, built a house and planted an orchard and lived there until he traded the land to Patrick for another tract, and made him a deed to it.

On final hearing the court gave judgment in favor of appellees. We must give the finding of the chancellor some effect. Our rule is not to disturb it where the proof is conflicting and leaves the mind in doubt as to the truth. It will be seen from the above that Strong only acquired by his purchase from Ulysses Turner the unsold land in the survey, and the land which had been previously sold was excepted out of the sale to him. The evidence of James Stidham is to the effect that the land in controversy was sold long before September 21, 1850, when appellees' purchase of Turner was made. The written receipt from Alexander Strong to Stidham bears date in July, 1847, and Stidham's testimony is confirmed by a number of witnesses testifying that he lived on the land, claiming it as his own, from about the time of his purchase from Alexander Strong. Though he lived on the land for a number of years, there seems to have been no controversy about his right at that time, and the price at which Patrick sold it to South and Williams, and at which South bought the undivided half from Smith and wife, would indicate that no doubt was entertained then of the sufficiency of this title, and this fact is entitled to some weight, as the records then of the title in the county clerk's office had not been destroyed. The proof is convincing, also from Stidham's planting out an orchard on the land and his manner of holding it, that he was not a tenant, as claimed by appellant. This proof is confirmed by a number of witnesses testifying to his working for Ketchum, building boats to pay for the land. It is also confirmed by the possession of the land by Patrick, South and South's heirs through tenants, from the time that Stidham left the land, or soon thereafter, until it was placed in the hands of the receiver. The conduct of appellant Strong, taking all the proof into consideration, seems to us to support the claim of the South heirs, and on the whole record we see no reason to disturb the chancellor's conclusion.

Judgment affirmed.

---

ILLINOIS CENTRAL R. R. CO. v. BOLES.

(Filed April 28, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Railroads—Negligence—Appellant is not responsible to appellee, an old woman, who was a passenger on its train, and was injured by falling against a seat in disobedience of the caution of the conductor, and was thereby deprived of a recovery by her own contributory negligence.

W. H. Marriott, I. W. Twyman, Pirtle & Trabue and J. M. Dickenson for appellant.

Gore & Williams and G. A. Taylor for appellee.

Appeal from Larue Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

This action was instituted by the appellee, Martha Boles, to recover of the appellant, the Illinois Central R. R. Co., damages for injuries alleged to have been received by her while a passenger upon one of its trains, caused, as she alleged, by its gross negligence, by which she was thrown down in the car and severely hurt.

The answer of appellant put in issue the allegations of negligence in the management of its train, and by a second paragraph charged contributory negligence of the appellee. The reply properly put in issue the allegation of contributory negligence. The trial of the case resulted in a verdict and judgment for the appellee in the sum of $600, from which appellant has appealed. The first question necessary to be decided is whether or not the lower court erred in overruling appellant's motion for a peremptory instruction, at the close of appellee's testimony. The facts are these: The appellee, who is seventy-two years of age, took passage on the train of appellant, at Hodgenville, Kentucky, for the purpose of going to Louisville. She seems to have been placed by a member of her family in charge of the conductor of the train at Hodgenville. When the train arrived at Cecilia, where it was necessary to change cars, the conductor saw her safely seated on the train bound for Louisville, and enjoined her to remain seated until the train stopped at the depot in Louisville.

It appears by appellee's own statement that when she was placed on the car at Cecilia by the conductor, Ludwick, he told her to remain seated until the train stopped still. Had she done this, no harm would have come to her, and when she disobeyed his injunction, she was guilty of negligence. It is true that she says somebody came to the door of the coach, and cried out in a loud voice, "all hands get out of here," and this was repeated in a loud voice two or three times; but she did not know, or say who this was, or whether he was an officer or employe of appellant. She further says that she could not hear well, and that her head was all bundled up. Evidently she misunderstood what was said on this occasion.

There is nothing in the record which shows that appellant fell short of the full discharge of any duty it owed to appellee as its passenger; its conductor saw her safely and comfortably seated in the car at Cecilia, where the change of cars was made, and there enjoined strictly upon her to remain in her seat until the car stopped still. There is no evidence in the case tending to show any unusual jerk or suddenness in the stopping of the train. Common experience teaches that there is always some sway in the cars when the train is stopped. Appellee, being old, somewhat deaf and timid, had been placed in the especial care of the conductor, and it was her duty, having been so placed, to obey the injunctions given for her safety. When the train neared Louisville, and the passengers commenced to get up and stand in the aisle, to put on their wraps and overcoats, as is usual on such occasions with the traveling public, appellee, forgetting, or disregarding, the injunction to keep her seat until the train stopped still, also got up, and when the train stopped, she being somewhat infirm, was thrown against the arm of the seat, and her side injured. A careful examination of this record convinces us that the injuries which appellee received were wholly caused by her own negligence, and the jury should have been peremptorily instructed to find for the appellant.

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

---

BUTTON v. GAST, &c.

(Filed April 29, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Street improvements—In this action to enforce a lien under an apportionment warrant on property abutting on an alley for its original construction, under an ordinance of the city of Louisville, appellant, a property owner, complains of the manner of assessment. Held—That if the method of assessment contended for by appellant be adopted it will cost him more than as now assessed. This court has adopted the rule that an apportionment of the cost of improving or constructing a street or alley will not be disturbed unless it affirmatively appears that under a different and proper method of assessment the defendant would be charged materially less, and that the apportionment made by the city would be prejudicial to his interest.

Wm. Furlong for appellant.

Lane & Harrison for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

This is an action to enforce apportionment liens for the original construction of an alley in the city of Louisville, running from Brandeis avenue south 1,375 feet and lying between old Third street, now called Park Place, and Fourth street and Fourth street extended. The description of the property, as given in the petition and the ordinance filed with it, shows that the territory contiguous to the alley is not defined into squares by principal public streets, and the answer in the following language admits this to be true: "The defendant says that the territory contiguous to this alley and on each side thereof is not now, and never was, defined into squares."

It is shown by the record that this alleyway has been improved by original construction, by ordinance and contract approved by the city council; that the improvement had been inspected and received; that the cost had been apportioned among the respective owners of property within the limits subject to assessment, and that the notice required to be published in the newspapers had been properly given. It has been repeatedly held by this court that an apportionment of the cost of improving or constructing a street or alley will not be disturbed unless it affirmatively appears that under a different and proper method of assessment the defendant would be charged materially less, and that the apportionment, as made by the city, would be prejudicial to this interest. And it is impossible from this record to tell what effect on the defendant a change in the manner of assessment would have. The indications are that the change in manner of assessment sought by him would very materially increase the cost to him in making the improvement.

In the case of Baird v. Falls City Artificial Stone Co., 21 Ky. Law Rep., 671, this court, in discussing this question, said: "In order to raise this question appellant should have pleaded and proved the facts showing that a wrong basis of apportionment was followed, and that under the proper method they would be required to pay less than under the methods adopted." Also 99 Ky., 235, in which the court said: "It appears that the method of apportionment was based on the assumption that the contiguous property was not divided into squares by principal streets, and it is the appellant's contention that the property was in fact so divided, and that, therefore, the method applied was erroneous. While the record does not show clearly the situation of the property in this respect, the exhibits, maps, etc., seem to show no such division into squares; but if it were otherwise, it does not appear that, under a different method of apportionment, the appellant would be required to pay less than under the method adopted."

The appellant also contends that the petition fails to show that the plans and specifications of the work were filed with the board of public works before the letting of the contract. The petition does show that the newspapers advertised in three issues each that proposals or bids for the improvement of the alley according to the provisions of the ordinance and the plans and specifications for the work were on file in the office of the board of public works, and the ordinance passed by the council with reference thereto shows that the plans and specifications were on file with the board of public works at the time of the passing of the ordinance and before the letting of the contract. While these allegations are possibly not specific enough, yet this court has decided in several cases that the law presumes that the officers performed their duty in this respect. In the case of Henning, &c. v. Stengel & Bickel, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1794, in discussing this subject, the court said: "The law presumes the officers did their duty, and if they failed to do it in this case, positive proof of it could have been made. The presumption of regularity is not overthrown by the evidence."

We have been unable to find any prejudicial error in the assessment of appellant's property for the improvement of this alley.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

---

CITY OF GEORGETOWN v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed April 29, 1903.)

Criminal law—Liability of municipal government for permitting a nuisance on private property—Appellant was indicted and convicted for permitting a nuisance to exist between the gas plant and the Big Spring branch, two points within the city. The specific acts charged are that the city permitted in an open gutter, drain and sewer all sorts of filth, excrement, vegetable and animal matter, refuse and waste from the gas plant and the ordinary sewerage of the community to flow through and along the open gutter, drain and sewer, and to remain, rotting and festering, etc. There is no pretense that the city or its officials created or caused the nuisance, or that it exists on any property belonging to or under the control of the city, except the ordinary police control as the agent of the State. On appeal, Held—That this appeal is based upon the theory that the city is liable to punishment for the failure of its officials to abate a nuisance on private property, and to prosecute the individuals responsible therefor. Nuisances are offenses at common law, and the persons creating or permitting them are liable to indictment wherever committed, and when the State grants to a city the power to abate or pass ordinances to punish persons guilty of such offenses, this right is exercised only in aid of sovereignty in enforcement of its laws for the comfort, safety and health of the public. The city, in such a case, becomes a part of the sovereignty, and, therefore, is not liable for the acts of its officers in enforcing or the failure to enforce the criminal or penal laws of the Commonwealth or the penal ordinances of the city.

W. S. Kelly for appellant.

Clifton J. Pratt and M. R. Todd for appellee.

Appeal from Scott Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

At the May term, 1902, of the Scott Circuit Court an indictment was returned against appellant, a city of the fourth class, in the usual and proper form, charging, in substance, that it did unlawfully suffer and permit in an open gutter, drain and sewer, between the gas plant and "Big Spring branch," two points within the limits of the city, all sorts of filth, excrement, vegetable and animal matter, refuse and waste from the gas plant and the ordinary sewerage of the community in, through and along the open gutter, drain and sewer to flow therein and to remain, rotting and festering and giving forth and emitting noxious and poisonous gases, charging and burdening the atmosphere with dangerous and offensive odors, and disturbing the comfort of all good people, etc.

On the plea of not guilty, the evidence showed, in substance, the following facts: That there was a natural drain running from the gas plant to "Big Spring branch," the drain passing along through the city, and into this drain the waste from the gas plant was permitted to flow, likewise the filth from privies on private property along this drain, and especially during the dry seasons of the year when water was not flowing in this drain, it became very obnoxious and offensive to the smell, and was in fact a nuisance. The gas plant was not owned or operated by the city. It was shown by the record that the city council had passed ordinances making it an offense, and fixing the penalties therefor for causing, maintaining or permitting, in the city limits, noxious or unhealthy matter in such a drain or in any place within the city.

The trial resulted in a verdict against the appellant for $480, and the court refusing to set aside the verdict and grant a new trial, the case is here on appeal.

If the corporation, the appellant, is liable to be indicted and fined for such an offense as proven in this case, then the judgment ought to stand. The only question to be determined is whether or not it is liable. As this is an important question to the State, and all the cities and towns in the State, we have taken great pains to examine all the authorities touching the subject within our reach. This direct question, so far as we have been able to find, has never been before this court before, that is, as to whether or not a municipal corporation can be indicted and fined for its failure to cause the abatement of a nuisance, or cause the punishment of the individuals creating and suffering the same on their private property. There is no pretense that the city or its officials created or caused the nuisance, or that it exists on any property belonging to or under the control of the appellant, except the ordinary police control as the agent of the State.

In the case of Dudley v. The City of Flemingsburg, 24 Ky. Law Rep., part II, 1804, the court said: "There are two general principles underlying the administration of government of municipal corporations. The one is that a municipal corporation, in the preservation of peace, maintenance of good order and enforcement of the laws for the safety of the public, possesses governmental functions and represents the State. The other is where the municipal corporation exercises those powers and privileges conferred for private, local or merely corporate purposes, peculiarly for the benefit of the corporation. Under the former the city is not liable for malfeasance, misfeasance or nonfeasance of its officers. Under the latter it is." * * *

This prosecution is based upon the theory that the city is liable to punishment for the failure of its officials to abate a nuisance and to prosecute the individuals responsible therefor. Nuisances are offenses at common law, and the persons creating or permitting them are liable to indictment wherever committed, and when the State grants to a city the power to abate or pass ordinances to punish persons guilty of such offenses, this right is exercised only in aid of sovereignty in the enforcement of its laws for the comfort, safety and health of the public. The city in such a case becomes a part of the sovereignty, and, therefore, is not liable to indictment. A municipal corporation is not liable for the acts of its officers in enforcing, or the failure to enforce, the criminal or penal laws of the Commonwealth or the penal ordinances of the city. In 17 Ky. Law Rep., 860, the court, in an action seeking to make the city liable for the malfeasance and misfeasance of its officers, said: "The municipal corporation in all these and the like cases represents the State or the public. The police officers are not the servants of the corporation. The principle of respondeat superior does not apply, and the corporation is not liable unless by virtue of a statute expressly creating the liability. The cases rest on the ground that municipalities represent the Commonwealth and municipal officers while engaged in duties relating to public safety, and in the maintenance of public order are the servants of the Commonwealth;" and refers to Dillon on Municipal Corporations, sections 974-975; Pollock's Adm'r v. The City of Louisville, 13 Bush, 221; Jolly's Adm'r v. Hawesville, 89 Ky., 279, and Prather v. Lexington, 13 B. M., 559.

The case of State v. The City of Burlington, 36 Vt., 524, was where the city was indicted for suffering and permitting a nuisance wherein, the slop and waste water from the premises of several individuals was conducted into a ditch, from which offensive and unwholesome odors arose, offensive to the inhabitants living on the street. The court, after discussing the liability of the city upon statutory questions, decided the case upon broader principles, and said: "But we are also of opinion that the removal or abatement of nuisances erected or created by private persons can not be considered as a corporate duty imposed by law upon towns. * * * This can not be considered as creating a corporate duty on the town unless we can assume that all and every duty, which by general laws is devolved upon officers elected by the town, is a corporate duty, and that the failure of every town officer to perform his official duty subjects the town to suit or indictment, if the consequence is injurious, either to any individual or to the community generally. But no such principle has ever been understood to prevail, except where the liability was created by statute. * * * The general supervision of the business affairs and concerns of towns is given to select men, and in the performance of such duties they are the agent of the town, and they may bind the town by their acts and the town be liable for their acts, in much the same manner, and upon the same principles that obtain between ordinary principals and agents. But when the legislature by general laws devolve certain duties relative to the general police upon select men, they do not become corporate duties and obligations of the town any more than such duties required to be performed by constables, grand jurors or justices of the peace. If there is any liability to individuals, or to the public, growing out of their failure to perform such duties, it is upon the officers, and not upon the town."

Cities are liable for the malfeasance of their officials in matters peculiarly pertaining to their benefit and advantage, but not for their failure to enforce or for nonenforcement of the criminal and penal laws of the sovereignty. Upon this principle town of Marion was made liable to McGraw. The town imprisoned him for the failure to pay a license fee, unconstitutionally imposed, for the peddling of spectacles in the town; the court, in substance, said that the license fee was for the sole benefit of the town, and McGraw had not committed any offense against the criminal or penal laws of the State, and, therefore, the officials of the town were not in that matter acting as agents of and in aid of the State in the enforcement of her laws, but were acting as the agents for the town and solely for its pecuniary benefit. (17 Ky. Law Rep., 1255.)

Counsel cite, as sustaining the judgment of the lower court, Dillon on Municipal Cor., section 933; A. & E. Enc. of Law, volume 20, 2d edition, 1209-31; 3 Met., 494; 7 B. M., 38; 51 Me., 532; 5 Hum. (Tenn.), 154; 5 Sneed (Tenn.), 578, and 81 Ky., 377.

Dillon on Municipal Corporations, section 933, is as follows: "Neglect of duty in respect of repair of streets, etc. In Tennessee a municipal corporation is considered liable, upon the general principles of common law, to indictment for neglecting its duty to keep its streets in reasonable repair, and it is no defense that the street is little used and is in a remote part of the town. And the mayor and aldermen may also be personally indicted for like neglect of duty. So in the same State it is held, upon the general principles of the law, that if a municipal corporation has power by its charter to pass such ordinances as may be necessary 'to preserve the health of the town, and to prevent and to remove nuisances,' it is its positive duty to exercise this power, and that for a neglect of this public duty it or its officers are liable to an indictment. An indictment against the mayor and aldermen was accordingly sustained for permitting a slaughter house to be kept upon the private property of the citizen or the town, to the annoyance of the inhabitants and the endangering of the public health, the court remarking that 'an indictment against the corporation is the proper mode of redress by the public for a grievance of this nature.' In Vermont a town is liable to an indictment as at common law for not erecting a bridge pursuant to an order from a competent tribunal. In Maine towns charged with the maintainance of public highways are by statute indicted for failing to discharge their duty in this respect; and the general principle is asserted in such cases that where the town is civilly liable in damages it may be indicted."

It will be noticed that the part of this section which refers to making municipal corporations criminally liable for the failure to abate or permitting nuisances on private property, refers solely to authorities in the State of Tennessee in support thereof. The authorities referred to are State v. Shelbyville, 4 Sneed, 176; Hill v. State, 4 Sneed, 443, and McCrowell v. Bristol, 5 Lea, 685.

The case of State v. Shelbyville was where an indictment was against the mayor and aldermen of the town for permitting a public nuisance, to wit, a slaughter house, to be kept by a private citizen in the town, alleged to be a nuisance, and for their failure to abate or suppress it.

The court said that they were liable, and the court stated in that opinion that the corporation was also liable to indictment. This was mere dictum, and the court did not cite any authority to support the statement.

In the case of Hill v. State, the mayor and aldermen of an incorporated town were indicted and punished individually for their failure to keep in repair the public streets of the town. The court sustained the judgment of the court below. It will be seen that this case is not in point because it has reference to the public streets of the town.

The case of McCrowell v. Bristol was where McCrowell sued the mayor and aldermen of the town of Bristol, alleging that they had aided in establishing a nuisance, to wit, a saloon on property adjoining his dwelling, and suffered and permitted drunken and boisterous persons to assemble, congregate and remain there, to his annoyance and damage. The court in that case said that he could not recover.

A. & E. Ency. of Law, 2d edition, volume 20, page 1209, is as follows: "A municipal corporation is liable for the creation or maintenance of a nuisance, whereby an individual sustains special injury. And a city is also liable if it licenses the creation or maintenance of a nuisance by third persons. But though cities have, as a rule, the power to abate nuisances, and it is their duty to abate them, yet there is no liability in damages for a failure to exercise the power of abatement. But a municipal corporation has been held liable to indictment for a dereliction of duty in such respect. If a city, having power to prevent and remove nuisances, invades and trespasses upon the rights of an individual in undertaking to exercise such power, it is liable in damages therefor."

The author in the use of this language, "but a municipal corporation has been held liable to indictment for a dereliction of duty in such respect," refers only to the case of State v. Shelbyville, 4 Sneed, supra, to uphold it.

Again, in same book, page 1231, this language is found: "Where duties of a public nature are imposed upon municipal corporations, such corporations are liable to indictment if they fail to discharge those duties according to law." And refers to authorities to sustain it to the Tennessee cases, above referred to. Also the case of Richardson v. Boston, 24 Howard (U. S.), 188; Hammer v. Covington, 3 Met. (Ky.), 494; Bragg v. Bangor, 51 Me., 532; New Bedford Bridge v. Commonwealth, 2 Gray, 389, and the State v. Canterbury, 28 N. H., 195.

We have already discussed the Tennessee cases referred to.

The case of Richardson v. Boston was where the plaintiff, Richardson, was the owner of two wharves, running from high to low water mark. The city owned a strip of ground 80 feet wide between the two wharves. The plaintiff sued the city for creating and maintaining a nuisance upon its property.

The statement of the case shows that it has no application to the case involved here.

- The case of Hammer v. Covington was where the court said that individuals, whose property was about to be destroyed by the giving away of a street of a city, had the right to a writ of mandamus against the council to compel them to have the street repaired.

The case of Bragg v. Bangor was where the court said "towns may be indicted and fined for allowing their highways to become unsafe and inconvenient."

The case of New Bedford Bridge v. Commonwealth was where the proprietors of a private corporation, called the "New Bedford Bridge," were indicted for creating and maintaining a nuisance in the manner of erection and maintenance of its bridge.

The case of State v. Canterbury was where the town was made liable to indictment for not building and repairing bridges as parts of the highway in which they are situated.

The case of Commonwealth v. Trustees of Hopkinsville, 7 B. M., 38, was where the trustees of the town were indicted for their failure to keep the streets clean.

The case of Seifried v. Hays, &c., 81 Ky., 377, was where Seifried was running a slaughter-house on his own property and the appellees sought an injunction restraining him from continuing the nuisance, and the court enjoined and restrained him from keeping dead animals, or any parts of dead animals, on his premises in such manner as would cause the offensive odor and stench complained of. And in the opinion the court remarked that an indictment against the appellant would have been the proper remedy.

It will appear from the statement of all the cases referred to that they have no application to the question before us.

We have found two cases decided by the Superior Court of this State which are apparently in conflict with the views herein expressed by this court. One case is the Commonwealth v. City of Paris, opinion by Judge Richards, 4 Ky. Law Rep., 599. After announcing the true doctrine, he uses this language: "But whenever the ministerial powers or duties of municipal corporations are involved, they stand before the criminal law upon the same footing with all other corporations. To this class belongs the duty to abate public nuisances." He then refers to the case of State v. Shelbyville, 4 Sneed, 177, supra, as the only authority to sustain such a proposition.

The other case is Commonwealth v. City of Paducah, opinion by Judge Ward, 6 Ky. Law Rep. 292. We have examined the manuscript opinion in this case, and find that he refers to, as authority, only Morawetz on Corporations, section 94; Dillon on Municipal Corporations, section 933, and Angell and Ames on Corporations, sections 394-6. We have in this opinion quoted and discussed Dillon on Corporations, section 933, and we have examined the sections referred to in Morawetz and Angell and Ames on Corporations, and find that they have reference alone to private corporations, and have no application to this case.

We have been unable to find any authority in any State sustaining the contention of the Commonwealth except the case of State v. Shelbyville, 4 Sneed, above referred to.

Wherefore, the case is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

---

MUTUAL BENEFIT LIFE INSURANCE CO. v. DAVIS.

(Filed April 29, 1903.)

1. Insurance—Forfeiture of policy—This action was brought to recover $1,000, the amount of a policy issued by appellant upon the life of appellee's husband. By the terms of the policy it was provided that after the payment of two annual premiums, the reserve to which the insured was entitled, would extend the life of the policy a certain number of years, and a like provision for extension of the insurance period for payment of each premium thereafter. Two premiums were paid when due, and when the third premium became due the insured borrowed the amount to pay same from the company, less the dividend due him. The insured failed to pay the fourth premium, and there was then due him a premium of $7.30, which it refused to give him a credit for. Several years thereafter the insured died, and appellant relied on the defense that, according to its calculation, the term for the extension of insurance had expired. Held—That the company erred in its calculation in estimating the premium as of the age of 24 years, instead of 21 years, which was the age at which the insurance was taken out. It also erred in refusing to allow a credit for the premium earned the third year, as the payment of the premium for the following year was not a condition precedent to receiving the premium already earned. It was also error to declare the policy forfeited on account of failure to pay the loan or interest on it as such forfeiture would be in the nature of a penalty for failure to pay money, and is contrary to public policy. When the insured is given credit for the dividend earned the third year, and the premiums and reserve calculated on the proper basis, the policy was continued in force beyond the death of the insured, and a recovery of the amount of the policy was properly adjudged.

Baird & Richardson and Dodd & Dodd for appellant.

Hatchett & James for appellee.

Appeal from Barran Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

Upon December 23, 1889, the appellant issued to the appellee's husband, Walter D. Davis, a policy of life insurance, by the terms of which they agreed to pay him at the end of twenty years from that date the sum of $1,000. Should he die within the endowment period this sum, after deducting therefrom all indebtedness to the company, was to be paid to Lizzie W. Davis; and the policy contained this clause which is called "non-forfeiture provisions:" "When after two full annual premiums shall have been paid on this policy, it shall cease or become void solely by the nonpayment of any premium when due, its entire net reserve by the American Experience Mortality and interest at four per cent., yearly, less any indebtedness to the company on this policy, shall be applied by the company as a single premium at the company's rates published and in force at this date, either, first, to the purchase of nonparticipating term insurance for the full amount insured by this policy, or, second." * * *

And it was further provided in the policy that if the assured paid two full premiums and then ceased to pay further, the net reserve should extend the policy for its full amount for 8 years and 347 days; and if he paid the third premium and then ceased, the net reserve should extend the policy for the term of 15 years and 45 days. At the time the policy was issued Walter D. Davis was 21 years old. The annual premium as fixed in the policy was $47.46. The first premium was paid to the company when the policy was issued, and the second upon December 23, 1890, the date it became due. When the third annual premium became due, on December 23, 1891, the insured was unable to meet it with a cash payment, and borrowed the amount from the company, less a dividend declared by it of $6.93, executing for the loan a note or loan certificate. He failed to pay the fourth annual premium, which became due December 23, 1892, at which time the company held another dividend due him of $7.30, which they failed to pay him or credit him with, claiming that the dividend was declared conditionally upon his paying of the premium. After this there was no action taken by either party until August 2, 1901, at which time the insured died, and on the 28th day of September, 1901, the appellee filed this action to recover under the nonforfeiture provisions of this policy. A trial was had, jury waived, and the court adjudged that the appellee was entitled to recover the amount of the policy, less the $40.53 note with its interest.

The appellant asks a reversal of the case upon the ground that the extended insurance, provided for in the policy, had expired before the death of Walter D. Davis.

Appellant claims that the net reserve to the credit of the insured was $97.53, which would have, under the contract, extended the policy for the full amount for 15 years and 45 days from the 23d day of December, 1892, but that this sum should be reduced by the amount loaned, with its interest, $42.96, leaving, as it claims, $54.57, which was the true net reserve according to the policy; that this sum of $54.57 continued the policy in force, counting his age at 21 years, 7 years and 154 days, making the policy expire May 26, 1900.

Appellant also says that it should not account for the last dividend declared due the insured, amounting to $7.30, but that if it should be chargeable therewith that it would increase the net reserve to only $61.87, which would only extend the insurance for 8 years and 216 days, making the policy expire July 27, 1901, six days before the death of the insured.

The appellant admits that it declared a premium of $7.30 due the insured prior to December 23d, 1892, and gave notice to the insured of that fact. But it claims that it declared provisionally upon his paying the premium due December 23, 1892. We are of the opinion that the case of Ætna Life Ins. Co. v. Hartley, 24 Ky. Law Rep., part I, 61, settles this matter against appellant's contention. The court said: "The company seeks to avoid the effect of this dividend, and the fact of it, too, so far as this policy is concerned by a proviso in the resolutions declaring the dividend, that it should go only to those policies that were continued in force thereafter. We are of the opinion that the board of directors had no authority to impose any such conditions upon their action in declaring the dividend. * * * The insurer could not add the condition that the insured should renew his policy by paying the next installment to become due before it would allow him to participate in the surplus already earned by the class to which his policy belonged; nor could it have imposed a condition that this surplus would not be allowed unless the insured paid all the premiums that might accrue under the policy and the insured outlived the tontine period, therefore, we conclude the insurance company owed the insured on the 10th day of March the sum of $5.65."

In that case this sum was the amount of the dividend, which sum extended the policy a few days beyond the death of the insured, and the court adjudged that the insurance company had the policy to pay. We can not exactly agree with the actuary's calculations. In the first place he calculates the extended insurance as of the age of 24 years, when the insured was 21 years of age at the issuance of the policy, and we have been unable to find anything in the policy to authorize such a calculation. In the next place, the calculations are made on a basis of annual premiums of $37.16 instead of $47.46. But even admitting the correctness of these assumptions and calculations on such a basis, it is apparent from the facts in the case that the policy was in force at the time of the death of the insured.

It is admitted that two years' premium in cash were paid, and that it was stipulated in the policy that the net reserve thereon extended the policy 8 years and 847 days, or to December 6, 1900, and it is admitted that the insured is entitled to the first dividend of $6.93, and we have adjudged that he was entitled to the second dividend of $7.80, these two sums amounting to $14.23, evidently would further extend the life policy beyond the life of the insured.

In the record there appears an insurance manual for 1901, and a pamphlet issued by appellant for 1879, introduced as evidence by appellant. According to this manual the net reserve for two cash annual premiums of $37.16 each is $63.52. The pamphlet gives the amount of the single premium to be paid for a specified term of years for the different ages, from twenty-five to fifty years, but it does not give it for the age of twenty-one. Appellant's actuary has calculated and found that for a man twenty-four years of age, a term of nine years would cost $64.36. We have calculated and found that for a man twenty-one years of age $63.52 would be more than is required for a nine-year term, or that $63.52 would extend the life policy for more than nine years, or until after December 23, 1901.

Appellant, by its actuary, made the calculation, assuming that the net reserve was $61.87, on a man twenty-four years of age, and ascertained that it would extend the life of the policy to within six days of the death of the insured, or to July 27, 1901. We have made the same calculation upon the same basis, except we calculated the age of the person at twenty-one, the age of the insured when the policy was issued, and ascertained that it would extend the life much beyond the date of the death of the insured, to wit, August 2, 1901.

According to the appellant's contention the insured would have been in much better condition if he had never settled the third premium. If he had paid only two premiums, as shown by the evidence of appellant's actuary and the exhibits filed by him, the insured would have had a net reserve of $68.52, which added to his admitted dividend of $6.93, amounts to the sum of $75.45, admittedly sufficient to have carried the policy considerably beyond the date of his death, although calculated at the age of twenty-four instead of twenty-one years. But the appellant claims that the net reserve for three annual premiums amounted to $97.53, which added to the last dividend of $7.30 makes $104.83, from which it claims that the amount borrowed from it by the insured, with 6 per cent. interest, amounting to $42.96, should be deducted, leaving $61.87 as the amount of the net reserve; which shows that by his borrowing from appellant he not only is required to pay the sum borrowed, together with 6 per cent. interest thereon, but by his failure to pay the sum borrowed, or the payment of his premium, he not only suffered the loss of his 6 per cent. interest which he agreed to pay for forbearance, but suffered the loss by forfeiture or penalty of several years of extended insurance on his policy previously paid for by him. This amounted to a forfeiture or penalty for the use or forbearance of money, pure and simple, and is against the policy of the laws of the State, and such a contract ought not to be enforced.

There are other reasons offered by appellee why this judgment should be affirmed, but we deem it unnecessary to discuss them.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

---

PARK & CO. v. CANE.

(Filed April 28, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Street improvements—This action was instituted upon an apportionment warrant issued for the improvement of Woodbine street. The square is bounded by principal streets. The lot of appellee, which is sought to be charged, is situated near the center of the square, and the square is in an irregular shape, and he complains of the mode of assessment adopted. Held—That as the statute requires that the cost shall be apportioned according to the number of square feet, the square foot is made the unit, and as appellee should be charged with only the proper number of square feet as apportioned, he can not complain.

Burnett & Burnett for appellants.

Lane & Harrison for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

This action is based upon an apportionment warrant issued for the improvement of Woodbine street. The square is bounded by principal streets, which are Floyd, Brook and Woodbine and Ormsby avenue. The lot against which the lien is asserted for the apportionment warrant is located almost in the center of the square. The square is not a right-angled parallelogram: it is irregular in shape. The running of a line midway between Ormsby avenue and Woodbine street would leave a greater number of square feet in one quarter square than in another. It is contended by counsel for the ap-pellee that, although the territory within the square is defined by principal streets, the proper method for dividing the square into quarter squares is to find the central point in each boundary line of the square and to connect the center points in the opposite streets with straight lines. On the other hand, it is contended for the appellant that the general assembly was not dealing with geometrical squares, but with a parcel of land bounded by principal streets, which it designated as squares, though irregular in shape. The court below sustained the appellee's contention.

Section 2833, Kentucky Statutes, reads as follows: "When the improvement is the original construction of any street, * * * such improvement shall be made at the exclusive cost of the owners of lots in each fourth of a square, to be equally apportioned by the board of public works according to the number of square feet owned by them respectively. * * * Each subdivision of the territory bounded on all sides by principal streets shall be deemed a square. When the territory contiguous to any public way is not defined into squares by principal streets, the ordinance providing for the improvement of each public way shall state the depth on both sides fronting said improvement, to be assessed for the cost of making the same according to the number of square feet owned by the parties respectively within the depth set out in the ordinance."

The authority of the general assembly to enact this statute is not, nor could it be, questioned. It defines the taxing district when the territory is bounded on all sides by principal streets. The improvement was made on Woodbine street, between Brook and Floyd streets. The owners in each fourth of a square bounding on Woodbine street were assessed for the improvement. The statute requires that the cost shall be apportioned "according to the number of square feet owned by them respectively." The square foot is made the unit, and any less than one-fourth of these units in a square would not constitute a quarter square in the meaning of the statute. In other words, a quarter square is one-fourth of the territory defined by principal streets. Unless the territory bounded by principal streets is a right-angled parallelogram, it can not be defined by midway lines without compelling the owners of lots in one quarter square to pay more than the owners of lots in the other quarter square assessed for the improvement.

It appears that the general council in 1889 passed an ordinance to improve Ormsby avenue, and at that time the territory which is now bounded by Floyd, Brook and Woodbine streets and Ormsby avenue was not bounded by principal streets. The ordinance designated the depth of the taxing district. According to the boundary thus designated a small part of the appellee's lot, which is now taxed for the improvement of Woodbine street, was taxed under the ordinance for the improvement of Ormsby avenue. It is, therefore, urged that the small part of the lot can not be taxed for the improvement of Woodbine street, it running parallel with Ormsby avenue. It is hardly necessary to enter into the discussion of the question as to whether the general council exceeded its authority in defining the taxing district for the improvement of Ormsby avenue. If it did so, the error was committed before the territory was defined by principal streets. If the owner of the lot in question submitted to an illegal apportionment, and thus paid more than was required by law, that fact would not invalidate the apportionment here under consideration, because the effect of it would be to cast additional burden upon other owners of lots in the quarter square in which the appellee's lot is situated, the effect of which would be to make innocent persons compensate the appellee for money which had been paid under an illegal assessment, providing the general council erred in defining the taxing district. In our opinion the apportionment complained of in this case was correctly made.

The judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

---

EDWARDS BARNARD CO. v. PFLANZ.

(Filed April 29, 1903.)

1. Sheriff—Attachment—Bonds—Surety—Appellant brought suit and obtained an attachment against A. and B., which was served on defendants and on a garnishee. To release the garnishment defendants executed to the sheriff a bond, under section 214, Civil Code of Practice, and took the bond with several sureties. Personal judgment was rendered against defendants, and a return of no property found was had against them. Personal judgment for the debt was also had against the sureties, and a return of no property found was had against them. This action was then instituted against the sheriff to recover the amount of said debt, alleging negligence in taking said bond with insufficient surety. After answer and proof the lower court, who tried both law and fact without the intervention of a jury, rendered a judgment in favor of defendant, from which this appeal is prosecuted. Held—That the finding of the lower court will be given the same effect as the verdict of a properly-instructed jury, and will not be disturbed unless flagrantly against the evidence. The finding of the lower court will not be disturbed for several reasons. The sheriff is not responsible for taking insufficient surety if he used reasonable care and diligence to ascertain the solvency of the sureties offered, and the proof shows that he exercised reasonable diligence to ascertain their solvency. The finding of the lower court will not be disturbed for the further reason that it nowhere appears from the record that the attachment obtained by appellant has been sustained. It is not averred or admitted in any of the pleadings that it was sustained. This fact is essential to a recovery under section 214 of the Civil Code of Practice. While under section 221, which provides for the execution of a bond to satisfy the judgment, it is immaterial whether the attachment was sustained or not.

2. Appeals—A copy of the order sustaining the attachment was not permitted to be filed in the Court of Appeals because it had not been filed or considered by the lower court.

W. W. Thum and G. Garner Clark for appellant.

Kohn, Baird & Spindle for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

Appellant brought suit and obtained an attachment in the Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division, against Jas. H. and Caleb E. Roberts on a note of $250 it held against them. The attachment was placed in the hands of appellee, John R. Pflanz, then sheriff of Jefferson county, for service. On the attachment was this endorsement:

“W. B. Tate & Co., Golden Rule Warehouse, garnishee: The object of this action is to attach all money, property, choses in action, or other evidence of debt in your hands belonging to Jas. H. Roberts and Caleb E. Roberts, or in which they have any interest, and to restrain you from paying the same to them, or to any one for them, until the further order of this court.

"PHELPS & THUM, Plffs. Attys."

The attachment was served by the sheriff on the defendants and the garnishee named therein. It does not appear from the record that the attachment was levied by the sheriff on any property of the defendants, Roberts; it was simply executed by delivering copies thereof to each of them, and to the garnishee.

After the execution of the attachment the defendants, Jas. H. and Caleb E. Roberts, with Ray & Co. (Robert P. Hare and Samuel Ray), as sureties, executed a bond to obtain a stay of the attachment, which bond was taken by the sheriff in words and figures as follows:

"Edwards-Barnard Co., Plaintiff.	} Forthcoming Bond.
"v.
"J. H. Roberts, &c., Defendants.

"Jefferson Circuit Court.

"We bind ourselves to the Edwards-Barnard Co., in the sum of $550, that the defendants, Jas. H. Roberts and Caleb E. Roberts, shall perform the judgment of the court in this action, or that the property attached in this action, or its value, shall be forthcoming, and subject to the order of the court. January 29, 1897.

"JAS. H. ROBERTS,
 "CALEB E. ROBERTS,
 "RAY & CO., that is
 "ROBERT P. HARE, and
 "SAMUEL RAY,
 "By JOHN T. BASHAW,
 "Atty. in fact."

Personal judgment was rendered in appellant's favor against Jas. H. and Caleb E. Roberts in the attachment suit for the amount of the note sued on, and execution was issued thereon, directed to the sheriff of Henry county, where the defendants then resided, but was returned "no property found." Thereafter appellant brought suit in the Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division, against Robert P. Hare on the bond taken by the sheriff, Samuel Ray having in the meantime died intestate and insolvent. In that action judgment by default was rendered against Hare in appellant's favor for $250, with interest and costs, upon which execution was issued directed to the sheriff of Jefferson county, by whom it was returned with the endorsement "no property found," etc. Then the appellants instituted this action in the Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division, against appellee, seeking to recover of him the amount of its debt and costs against Jas. H. and Caleb E. Roberts, upon the alleged ground that he had negligently, as sheriff, failed to require good security upon the bond taken by him in the matter of the attachment, and that the sureties therein, Samuel Ray and Robert P. Hare, were insolvent when they were accepted on the bond, and that their insolvency was known, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have been known, to appellee at the time.

After answer and other necessary pleadings had been filed, proof in the shape of depositions was taken by the parties upon the issues thus formed, and upon submission and trial of the case judgment was rendered by the lower court dismissing appellant's petition, and allowing appellee his costs. Of that judgment appellant complains, hence this appeal.

We will not take time to consider all of the questions raised by the appeal, deeming it necessary to notice only such as, in our opinion, are decisive of the case. It will be observed that this action is purely an ordinary, or common-law, action, and it is a well-known rule in such cases that the judgment of the chancellor will be as favorably regarded as would be the verdict of a properly-instructed jury, hence unless palpably against the evidence, it will not be disturbed. (Louisville, &c., Railway Co. v. Taylor, 96 Ky., 241.)

The rule is, however, different in equitable actions, for in such action this court will upon appeal determine the weight of the evidence. (Scott v. Mitchell, 19 Ky. Law Rep., 218.) The judgment of the chancellor in this case must, therefore, be tested by the rule first herein stated, and unless it is found to be flagrantly against the evidence, it will not be disturbed. The only issue of fact necessary to be determined by the chancellor was whether or not appellee, as sheriff, was guilty of negligence in taking the bond executed by the Roberts', with Ray and Hare as sureties. The sheriff is not the guarantor of the solvency of a surety whom he may take upon a bond. We have no statute in this State fixing the liability of the sheriff, or defining the degree of care required of him in the matter of taking bonds. The rule by which his official conduct in such cases is to be measured is thus stated in Meachem on Public Officers, section 762: "So where it is the duty of the officer to take, for the protection of the plaintiff, bonds or other securities, it is the officer's duty not only to obtain the bond, bail or other security, but to use reasonable care and diligence to see that none but competent and reasonable securities are accepted, and that the securities themselves are in proper and sufficient form. He is not the insurer of the solvency of the sureties, unless the statute makes him so, nor is he liable, though deceived, where he exercises reasonable care; but if he discharges the goods or debtor without any bond at all, or one in which the sureties names are forged, or if he accepts insufficient sureties, without making a reasonable effort to ascertain their solvency, he is liable. A fortiori is he liable where he accepts sureties who he knows are irresponsible." It must be presumed that the chancellor found from the evidence that appellee in taking the bond in controversy used reasonable care to ascertain the financial condition of the sureties, and to satisfy himself of their solvency, if he did, he can not be held responsible for a mere mistake of judgment. Of the witnesses whose depositions were taken by appellant only one had had any business connection with the sureties, and none of them claimed to have any actual knowledge of their business or affairs. What they testified to was largely hearsay, and what they professed to know was based mainly upon suspicion and conjecture.

Freese, of the Western Bank, whose deposition was taken by appellant, testified that the credit of the sureties was at the date of the bond fairly good with the bank. Hare, one of the sureties, and young Ray, who was in the employ of the firm, both say that at the time the bond was executed their assets exceeded their liabilities by a considerable amount, and though they soon thereafter failed, it seemed in large measure to have been brought about by a destructive fire in their tobacco warehouse. Hare also testified that the firm of Ray & Hare, at the date of the execution of the bond, owned a house and lot in the village of Lewisport, Hancock county, which was unencumbered, and which was taken by them at the valuation of $800, but was subsequently assessed at $200. This lot was, after the execution of the bond, transferred to the bank by Ray & Hare, at a valuation of $360, and was afterward sold by the bank at $75. But it is more than probable that the bank did not care to retain unremunerative real estate at any price, and hence sold it at a sacrifice.

But conceding that it was only worth that sum, or but little more when the bond was executed, its value was practically equal to the amount for which appellee, if legally liable at all, could be made responsible in damage for neglect in taking the bond, for his liability could not exceed that of the sureties on the bond, and if it be true as testified by Hare, whose statements on that point are uncontradicted, that the proceeds of the sale of the tobacco in the hands of the garnishees afforded a surplus of only $50 to $75 after paying the factor's liens, it would seem to follow that the sureties in the bond would in no event have been liable for an amount greater than the surplus. In Hayman v. Hallam, 79 Ky., 389, it was held by this court that sureties in such bond as was taken by the sheriff in this case were liable only for the surplus of the property attached after the payment of existing liens antecedent in date to the attachment, and that the sureties could set up by way of defense to an action against them on the bond the amount of such liens.

We do not suppose that the chancellor based his judgment alone upon the ground that as the liability of the sureties on the bond does not appear to exceed the value of the Lewisport lot, their ownership of that property of itself qualified or made them good as sureties on the bond, but that fact, with the further facts shown by the evidence, that the sureties were then in the tobacco business in Louisville, and operating a warehouse, with some tangible property in their possession of which they were the apparent, if not the real, owners, and that considerable sums were being received by them through their business, doubtless superinduced the conviction in the mind of the chancellor that the sheriff had good reason to believe, and as a prudent man did believe, that Ray & Hare were good and sufficient sureties on the bond, and that he is not to be charged with negligence because he accepted them in that capacity. At any rate, as the decision of the chancellor upon this issue is entitled to as much weight as would be the verdict of a jury, and as it can not be said by this court to be flagrantly against the evidence upon this ground alone, the judgment might, with propriety, be affirmed.

It nowhere appears from the record that the attachment obtained by appellant has been sustained. It is certainly not averred, or admitted, in any of the pleadings that it was sustained. The bond in this case was given under section 214, Civil Code. A bond may be given under section 221, the effect of which is to discharge the attachment, for it is to perform the judgment of the court, and can be given only by the defendant, and when given it substitutes the bond for the attached property, and shuts off all defense to the attachment, or right to contest the grounds thereof.

Where the bond is given under section 221 it is not necessary for the court to sustain or discharge the attachment, for the right of recovery on the bond follows a personal judgment against the party executing it. But the giving of the bond provided for in section 214 is wholly different in purpose and effect. The latter bond may be given by any person in possession of the property attached. It is to be taken by the sheriff, and is conditioned that the defendant shall perform the judgment in the action, or that the property or its value shall be forthcoming and subject to the order of the court. This bond does not discharge the attachment, but constitutes an obligation that the property shall be produced and delivered when the court so orders. The lien created by the attachment and the right of the court to subject it to the payment of the attachment debt continues as fully after the giving of a forthcoming bond as if no such bond had been given, and the attachment itself continues until the case is finally determined by the judgment of the court on the attachment, as well as on the merits of the case. (Hobson v. Hall, 13 Ky. Law Rep., 109.)

It would seem to follow, therefore, and such is our opinion, that there can be no liability on the bond in this case, which was given under section 214, Civil Code, in the absence of a judgment sustaining the attachment. It is not enough that a personal judgment was executed for the debt sued on. Some disposition of the attachment by judgment of the court was also necessary. The attachment was ancillary. The defendant may owe the debt and be willing to allow personal judgment to go against him, and yet if the grounds of attachment do not exist the attachment may be successfully resisted, and the court adjudged its discharge, or the grounds of attachment may exist, yet the property attached may not be subject to attachment. The trial of the attachment is wholly distinct from the trial of the case on its merits, and sometimes precedes, sometimes follows, the main trial. (Kassel v. Sneed, 21 Ky. Law Rep., 777; Frances v. Burnett, 84 Ky., 24; sections 263-264, Civil Code.)

If no liability rests upon the sureties in this bond, in the absence of a judgment sustaining the attachment, it necessarily follows that none rests upon the sheriff for taking insufficient sureties on the bond.

The appellant has offered to file in this court what purports to be a copy of the order of the lower court sustaining the attachment, but we do not think it should be now filed, as it was not filed, or made a part of the record, upon the trial in the lower court, and it is not proper to add to the record in this court something by way of evidence which was not used in or furnished the former court. But in any event the copy of the order now offered to show that the attachment was sustained, even if allowed to be filed, can not cure or supply the entire omission from the petition of the necessary averment that the attachment was sustained.

Finding no error in the record prejudicial to appellant's rights, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

HARPER v. PAYNE, GD'N, &amp;c.

(Filed April 29, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Guardian and ward—Appellant, the father of two infants, a son aged seventeen and a daughter aged fifteen years, was their guardian for a period of eleven years, and sought to charge them with board, amounting to $2,200. The children own a tract of land which yields a gross rental of $820 a year. The guardian has a net income of not exceeding $350. Held—That the father is not entitled to charge the board claimed. He should contribute $200 a year to the support of his children, and the income of the infants should be charged with the cost of their education, clothing and medical bills. It is the duty of the father to provide for his infant children, and he is entitled to their labor, and they could evidently earn their living.

Montgomery & Lee for appellant.

V. F. Bradley for appellees.

Appeal from Scott Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Burnam.

On the 12th day of December, 1899, the appellant, W. W. Harper, made a settlement of his accounts as guardian of his infant children, Payne Harper and Sally B. Harper, with the commissioner of the Scott County Court. It appears from a former settlement made by him on the 20th of April, 1892, that there was a balance in his hands due to his wards of $220.35, and that after that settlement he received from Mrs. Carrie Payne, executrix of his children's grandfather, $966, and that he received from rent of his wards' land (inherited presumably from their grandfather), between the 14th of November, 1894, and the 17th of August, 1899, $1,998.80, aggregating $3,185.15. Deducting from this sum 5 per cent. commissions, there remained a net balance due his wards on the 30th day of January, 1900, $3,025.90. In this settlement he claimed the following credits:

Mrs. Carrie Payne, board bill for September 1, 1888, to September 1, 1899, for Payne Harper and S. B. Harper.....	$2,200 00
To Lewis & Coffman, Med. bill.....	35 50
To tuition college, Payne and Sallie....	37 50
Rucker & Richards, Payne Harper.....	115 00
Which credits aggregate.....	$2,387 50

About this time he resigned as guardian of his children, and their aunt, Miss Lida Payne, qualified as guardian, and filed exceptions to each of these credits, upon the ground that appellant was the father of his wards, with ample income from the property owned by him to support them and himself. The exceptions were sustained, and it was adjudged by the county court that appellant, as guardian, should not be allowed any credits for money expended by him for his wards for their maintenance, support and education, and gave judgment against him for $3,025.90. From this judgment he appealed to the Scott Circuit Court, and upon hearing in that court the judgment of the county court was affirmed, and he has appealed to this court.

It appears from the testimony in the record that appellant is thirty-eight years of age, and in good health; that he owns a life estate in 255 acres of poor land, which yields a gross rental of about $350 a year, and also a life estate in a house and lot in the city of Georgetown, which yields a rental of $300 per year, paid, however, in board of himself and two children; that the annual taxes and insurance on this property is about $160 a year. It is not definitely shown the extent of the repairs, but we think it may be safely assumed that they are not less than $100 more, which would leave the appellant a net income of not exceeding $350. It appears that he has no profession or trade, and is unaccustomed to manual labor, and seems thoroughly improvident. In addition to the cash in the hands of appellant belonging to his infants, it is shown that they own jointly a tract of fifty acres of land, which yields a gross rental of $320 a year. The children have always lived in the family of their grandmother in the city of Georgetown, and seem to have rendered no services whatever to the father. The boy is seventeen years of age and the girl fifteen. The proof shows that the boy is industrious, and had earned as much as 75 cents a day by his manual labor, and both, no doubt, if it were necessary, are capable of earning their support. In the case of Hedges v. Hedges, ante, 2220, decided at the present term of the court, it is said: "The general rule is that the father must support his infant children. The obligation is both a natural and a legal one; if he is able to support them, he is required by law to do so, although they may have an estate of their own. It is only where he is unable to support them, in view of his obligation to other dependent members of his family, and where their estate is sufficient for the purpose, that the courts allow as an exception that the father may charge the guardian of his infant children with their support. The father is by law entitled to the labor and wages of his infant children; this is partly because he is charged with their support."

It is evident that the net income of appellant would be insufficient to support his two children and himself in the manner to which they have been accustomed. And whilst it is perhaps unfortunate, both for him and them, that he has not kept them with him upon his farm in the country, and required them to do some work for the benefit of the family, that is a matter which it is not our province to control.

It seems to us under the facts of this case that the chancellor properly refused to allow appellant the item of $2,200 for board of his two infant children, and also for the $115 paid to Rucker & Richards for a buggy for Payne Harper. The uncontradicted testimony of Miss Lida Harper shows that this buggy was a gift from the father to the son, and in no event was it a proper expenditure to be charged against the estate of the wards in the hands of the guardian. We think appellant should certainly contribute as much as $200 a year towards the support and maintenance of his infant children, but in view of the very narrow income which would remain to him after he paid this sum, we are of the opinion that the income of the infants should be charged with the cost of their education, clothing, medical bills, and that moneys expended for these items for them by appellant should be allowed as a credit on the funds in his hands due to his wards.

For reasons indicated the judgment is reversed and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

STEELE, JR., &c. v. NEW PARK CITY B. & L. ASSOCIATION, &c.

(Filed April 29, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Building and loan associations—Insolvency—Stock payments—In this action to settle the accounts of an insolvent building and loan association, which had been placed in the hands of a receiver, the lower court by its judgment approved a method of settlement reported by the receiver which proposed to estimate the value of the stock and the costs and expenses, and to levy an assessment of $20 per share on borrowing and nonborrowing stockholders alike, to pay these expenses and settle with each stockholder by allowing him credit for all sums paid in, including all payments on stock. On appeal, Held—That borrowing members are not entitled to have deducted from their indebtedness to the association payments made by them as dues on stock, but must, after deducting payments of premium and interest, discharge in cash the balance remaining upon their indebtedness. Payments upon stock must stand to their credit on the books of the association until time for final adjustment, when all the stockholders, borrowers or non-borrowers, will be paid pro rata from the fund for ultimate distribution.

D. W. Steele, Jr., for appellants.

Hager & Stewart for appellees.

Appeal from Boyd Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

The appellee association was incorporated, and began business in March, 1889, with an authorized capital of $100,000, divided into shares of $200 each. Its business seemed to have been confined to the city of Ashland and vicinity, and it was conducted as follows: The stockholders of the association met at its office in Ashland every two weeks and paid at every such meeting $1 on each share of stock owned by them respectively, and if they were borrowers from the association, as many of them were, they paid or were charged in addition to the dues on their stock interest upon loans, and fines in case of the nonpayment of dues and interest. Loans were made upon mortgage security, and in some instances pledge of paid-up stock. In the manner of conducting the business of this association no dividends to the stockholders were declared or paid, the dues and interest payments being intended to constitute a fund for the redemption of shares, and when sufficient money had been paid into the association to redeem all the stock the business of the association would be at an end.

Upon the basis thus adopted for the payment of dues upon stock, viz., at the rate of $1 per share every two weeks, it was assumed by the stockholders that one hundred and sixty-five payments of dues by each stockholder, together with the payments of interest on loans, would mature the stock, and make each share of the value of $200, and if the plan had been carried out as contemplated such would have been the results, but as is usual with such ventures the end aimed at was not attained, and we find from the record that the association has been insolvent since July, 1895.

From the time of the organization of the association down to July, 1895, one H. A. Levi was its secretary, and in that month he defaulted and fled the State for parts unknown, indebted to the association not less than $8,000, and perhaps as much as $8,000, no part of which has been, or will be, recovered by the association.

This action was instituted in the Boyd Circuit Court, September 1, 1897, by appellants to wind up the affairs and settle the indebtedness of the association, and to this end its property and assets were, by the order of court, placed in the hands of John C. Hopkins, its receiver and commissioner. It appears from the record that the association loaned a good deal of money to its stockholders, much of which has not been repaid, and in addition that some of the stockholders, borrowers and nonborrowers are in arrears with their dues upon stock held by them. In view of this state of things the court, on appellants' motion, entered an order directing the receiver to collect the loans from the borrowing members, less the payments that had been made thereon by such borrowers, exclusive of the payments they had made on account of their stock, which latter payments were directed to be reserved until distribution should be made of the assets of the association. In other words, the receiver was directed to credit the borrowing stockholders with all sums paid by them on their loans, but was not to credit them with amounts paid on their stock. It, however, appears that the foregoing order was suspended by the court, and thereafter the receiver filed a report in which he attempted to present a basis for a settlement of the affairs of said association, without first requiring all borrowing and nonborrowing stockholders to pay what they owe it, that is to say, the theory presented by the receiver is to endeavor to equalize the accounts of the stockholders as between themselves, by making them all account for dues and the borrowers for interest to the one hundred and sixty-fifth meeting, and then, without collecting in full from borrowers, credit them with all dues paid, and provide for the collection of a sum sufficient to pay all liabilities of the association by assessing against each stockholder his due proportion of the loss to all. Exceptions to the report of the receiver were filed by appellants and others, but they were overruled, the report confirmed, and the receiver directed by the judgment of the lower court to proceed with the work of winding up the affairs of the association upon the basis contained in his report, and from that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

We are of the opinion that the report of the receiver is too general and indefinite in its findings to have authorized the judgment rendered thereon by the court. It does not with reasonable certainty give the assets or approximate the indebtedness. Its conclusions on these points, as well as in regard to the probable cost of settling the affairs of the association, are upon estimates that seem to be purely speculative, indeed to follow the theory of settlement proposed by the report would, in our opinion, be but an experiment of doubtful result.

It is, however, contended that the rule stated in Endlich on Building Associations (section 5312, 2d edition), which was quoted with approval by this court in Reddick, & c. v. U. S. Building and Loan Association's Ass'ee, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 1720, will authorize the adoption of the basis of settlement proposed by the receiver in this case. The rule in question is thus stated by Endlich: "There can, however, ordinarily be no reason why he (the borrowing member) should be put to the inconvenience of paying down the whole amount of his debt without credit for his stock payments, and relegated to a distribution of the corporate assets in order to get back what he might, in the first instance, have been permitted to retain. In general, the only effect of such a rule, besides the distinct hardship upon the borrower, will be to swell the amounts passing through the receiver's hands, to complicate the accounts, and the distribution, and thereby to increase the expenses of the settlement, etc. * * * There can be no difficulty," continues the learned author, "in determining, or at least approximating, what receipts, profits and losses have been, what its liabilities are, and what is the value of every share of stock presently held, advanced or unadvanced, in it and how much every member must lose upon every dollar paid in by him upon his stock, making a proper allowance for the expenses of settlement."

In commenting upon this rule this court in the case supra, among other things, said: * * * "The rule can be followed only where the extent of the losses and expenses of the settlement can be so surely estimated as to render it safe to fix an approximate value on the stock, and this must be left in a large measure to the sound judgment of the chancellor, having the whole case before him."

After stating such facts as to the indebtedness and assets of the United States Building and Loan Association as were admitted in the record, the court refused to apply the rule announced by Endlich in settling its affairs, and in that connection further said: "These assets consisted of loans to its members, and according to statements of agreed facts, secured either by mortgages upon real estate or by stock of the company. To what extent loans were secured by stock of the company we do not know. If there had been such loans their amounts and extent ought to have been shown, and it seems to us also there ought to have been some proof, in a general way at least, as to the value of these securities. The assignee expresses an unwillingness to take the responsibility of fixing a value on the stock, or allowing the credits therefor on the loans. Unless, therefore, the borrowing members are sufficiently interested to make it reasonably certain by proof that such value may be fixed, it can not be done. In view of the meager statements in the record before us, we can not say the chancellor was authorized to fix any approximate value on the stock for which credit may be given the borrower."

In the case at bar we find that the only indebtedness of the association is to its own members, and it appears also that the receiver, in stating the accounts of the association, reports, according to what he says is the best approximation possible, the liabilities at $3,993.80, leaving what he calls a net loss of $3,008.70, but as the net loss must manifestly be ascertained by subtracting the assets from the liabilities, the loss or deficit intended to be stated by the receiver, as shown by correct subtraction, will be $2,993.80, instead of $3,008.70, as reported. To this loss, he says, must be added the cost of administration, $1,000, which would make the net sum to be realized $3,993.80, instead of $4,008.70 as reported. To raise this sum the receiver proposes to assess the 202 shares of stock of the association $20 per share, to be collected from all the stockholders, borrowers and nonborrowers. The amount of assets reported seems to be made up of sums, said by the receiver, to be due from borrowers to the association, on loans secured in greater part by mortgage, after deducting $1,000 for losses by way of set-offs and credits. The facts and figures thus reported by the receiver were taken, as he says, from the association's books.

Upon the other hand, appellants, in the exceptions filed by them, claim that the assets of the association amount to $9,649.05, and its liabilities to $9,210.49, leaving an alleged surplus of $438.56, and that if the borrowers, and those in arrears for dues on stock, are made to pay what they owe the association, the only matter that would have to be provided for by the assessment against the stockholders would be the cost of winding up the affairs of the association, which would not exceed $5 per share.

It is further claimed by appellants that the statement of assets and liabilities presented by their exceptions was obtained from the books of the association. The books are not in the record before us, nor were they, so far as appears from the record, before the lower court when the exceptions were overruled by that court. We are likewise unable to ascertain from the record that any proof, by deposition or otherwise, was heard or considered by the court in passing upon the questions of fact raised by the receiver's report, and the numerous exceptions that were filed to same, yet the court accepted and based its judgment upon the report alone. We think this was error, for in the absence of proof, and in view of the unsatisfactory showing made by the report, "we can not say the chancellor was authorized to fix any approximate value on the stock for which credit may be given the borrowers," in advance of the payment by them of what they owe on the loans extended them by the association.

We think it more equitable that the affairs of the appellee association be administered according to the rule announced by this court in Rogers' Receiver v. Rains, 18 Ky. Law Rep., 768, which holds that in winding up an insolvent building and loan association borrowing members are not entitled to have deducted from their indebtedness to the association payments made by them as dues on the stock, but must, after deducting payments of premium and interest, discharge in cash the balance remaining upon their indebtedness. Payments upon stock must stand to their credit on the books of the association until time for final adjustment, when all the stockholders, borrowers or nonborrowers, will be paid pro rata from the fund for ultimate distribution.

For the reasons indicated the judgment of the lower court is reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent with the opinion herein.

---

McCORMICK HARVESTING MACHINE CO. v. DODKINS.

(Filed April 30, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Contracts—In this action the lower court refused to compel appellee to comply with his contract for the purchase of a corn shredder from appellant, which had been represented to him as in good condition and would work satisfactorily, and it was agreed that in case it failed to perform the work required, notice of same should be given to the agent of appellant, and an opportunity afforded to put same in working condition, and other conditions as to return of machine, etc., were agreed on. On appeal, Held—That the decision of the chancellor will not be disturbed as the proof shows that the appellee complied with all requirements in order to have the machine do good work, and that it failed to do it.

E. B. Drake and S. R. Crewdson for appellant.

W. P. Sandidge for appellee.

Appeal from Logan Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson.

Appellee ordered of appellant a corn shredder. By the terms of the order he was either to pay $190 cash for the machine when received or to execute two notes, each for $100, due January 1, 1901, and 1902, respectively. The order also contained the following: "This machine is warranted to be well made, of good material, and durable, with proper care. If upon one day's trial the machine should not work well, the purchaser should give immediate notice to said McCormick Harvesting Machine Co., or their agent, and allow time to send a person to put it in order. If it can not be made to work well, the person shall return it at once to the agent of whom he received it, and all cash and notes received in settlement will be refunded. Continuous use of the machine, or use at intervals through the harvesting season, or failure to notify the McCormick Harvesting Machine Co., or their agent, or to return the machine as agreed, shall be deemed an acceptance of the machine by the undersigned."

When the machine was delivered he did not pay cash or execute the notes, and refusing subsequently to do either, he was sued by appellant in this action in equity, praying judgment for the price of the machine, $190, or that he be compelled to execute the notes therefor. He defended the action on the ground that the machine was not as represented, or warranted, and that he had refused to accept it. The circuit court, on final hearing, dismissed the petition.

The evidence is very conflicting, but after a careful consideration of it all, and the circumstances shown thereby, we have reached the conclusion that we ought not to disturb the chancellor's finding under the rule adopted by the court as to the effect to be given the chancellor's finding of fact in cases of this character. We deem it unnecessary to elaborate our reasons for this or to detail the conflicting evidence. The defendant brought his defense literally within the terms of the contract. It is provided in the contract, as will be seen above, that if upon one day's trial the machine should not work well the purchaser should give immediate notice to the company, or to its agent, and allow time to send a person to put it in order. The defendant showed that when the machine was set up and started by the company's agents he at once notified them that it did not work well. They then took out some parts of the machine and agreed to put on a basket to save the corn, and agreed to return the next morning and put the basket on. This they failed to do. It will also be seen from the contract that it was provided that if the machine could not be made to work well the purchaser should return it to the agent of whom he received it. The defendant testified that after giving the machine a fair trial he offered to return it to the agent of whom he received it, and the agent requested him to put it under shelter on his farm for the company. This he did. The agent had power to waive the return of the machine, and this request on his part was a waiver; for the company, after requesting the defendant to put the machine under shelter on his farm for it, can not complain that he did not do something else with it. It is insisted, however, that appellee is liable for the machine under the last clause of the contract, providing that continuous use of the machine, or use at intervals through harvesting season, or failure to notify the company, or its agent, or to return the machine as agreed, should be deemed an acceptance of the machine by the purchaser. There is great force in this argument, if we look only to the evidence for the plaintiff. But the evidence for the defendant tended to show that the agents assured him that the machine would do better if the corn was dry, or after it was run a little while, and that they promised later to come and fix it and make it do. Under all the evidence, it would seem pretty clear that the machine did not do good work. The great weight of the evidence shows that it so wasted the corn that a farmer could not well afford to use it for the purpose for which it was purchased. And taking into consideration the assurances given appellee by the agent and all the circumstances, we are satisfied that he never intended to accept the machine unless it did the work better than it had done. The evidence is very conflicting as to the amount that he used it, but taking the testimony on his behalf to be true, we do not think that there was any such use of the machine as should be deemed an acceptance of it under the contract. The testimony for the plaintiff and the defendant is very conflicting on this point, but, on the whole case, we are unable to see that the testimony for the plaintiff outweighs the testimony for the defendant. A circumstance that has great weight with us is the fact that he executed no notes for the machine and paid nothing on it, and no demand was made on him by the company when the machine was set up, or at any time while he was using it, for the execution of the notes or the payment of the money. He had not seen the machine before ordering it. It was an experiment, and the agents of the company were interested in the experiment being a success, for its failure would have a bad local effect on the sale of other machines.

Judgment affirmed.

---

MERKLEY & SON v. U. S. FIDELITY AND GUARANTY CO.

(Filed April 30, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Surety—Broker—Pleading—This action was brought by appellants on bond executed by B., with appellee as surety, to recover the value of goods alleged to have been sold B. On a former appeal this court determined that the goods were not sold to B. by appellants, but shipped to him as broker for appellants, with directions to sell and report sales, and that the liability of appellee on the bond was limited to loss due to the fraud or dishonesty of B. On the return of the case appellants amended their petition, and charged that the loss resulted from the fraud and dishonesty of B. The lower court sustained a demurrer to the petition as amended, and the petition was dismissed. Held—That the court erred in sustaining a demurrer to the petition as amended, as the amendment was not a departure from the original cause of action.

H. W. Rives for appellants.

John McChord for appellee.

Appeal from Marion Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson.

On the former appeal, after setting out the terms of the bond sued on and the facts attending the shipment and leading up to it, the court concluded its opinion with these words: "From the above it is perfectly clear that Bass did not buy the goods from appellees, but that they were shipped to him as a broker to sell, and that they understood at the time that appellant, as his surety in the bond, was only responsible in case of fraud or dishonesty on his part. The petition does not charge that the loss sued for was due to the fraud or dishonesty of Bass, and the demurrer to it should have been sustained. The instructions of the court were erroneous in so far as they allowed the jury to find against appellant for any loss not due to the fraud or dishonesty of Bass. Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion." (U. S. Fidelity and Guaranty Co. v. Merkley & Son, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1570.)

It was thus in effect held that the petition would be sufficient if it charged that the loss sued for was due to the fraud or dishonesty of Bass, and that instructions were proper allowing the jury to find against appellant for a loss due to his fraud or dishonesty. On the return of the case to the circuit court the petition was amended so as to charge that the loss sued for was due to the fraud or dishonesty of Bass. The court thereupon sustained the demurrer to the petition as amended, and dismissed the action.

The opinion rendered on the former appeal is the law of this case, and is equally binding on this court and the circuit court. As it was then determined that appellant was responsible for any loss due to the fraud or dishonesty of Bass, the circuit court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the petition as amended. And while it is unnecessary now to elaborate the reasons on which the former opinion was based, we will add that we see nothing in the case as now presented that was not presented in the petition for rehearing then filed. We concluded then that the goods were shipped to Bass as a broker. It was charged in the petition that they were sold to Bass. This was denied by the answer. The plaintiff regarded the transaction as a sale because a fixed price was charged to Bass when the goods were shipped to him; but independently of whether the transaction was called a sale or a delivery to an agent, we were then of opinion that appellee was responsible for any loss due to the fraud or dishonesty of Bass, as according to the proof he was to remit on every Monday night for what had been sold the previous week, and to try to dispose of the goods as fast as possible in order to do a safe business. The bond was given to secure the performance of this agreement, and was binding on appellee regardless of the name of the transaction.

In the amended petition filed upon the return of the case it was averred that under the arrangement it was the duty of Bass to safely keep the goods shipped to him by plaintiffs until they should be sold for cash, after which it was his duty to promptly remit to plaintiffs on every Monday the money so received during the previous week. This sufficiently averred that the goods were sent to Bass to sell and remit the proceeds to the plaintiffs, which would constitute him in law the plaintiffs' broker. This was not a departure from the original cause of action, but only a conforming of the allegations of the petition to the view of the laws of the case which this court had laid down.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

NEWTON, &c. v. SOUTHERN BAPTIST THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, &c.

(Filed April 30, 1903.)

Wills—Conditional devise—N., by his will, devised one hundred and twenty acres of land to his daughter if she should live longer than his daughter-in-law, but if the daughter-in-law is the longest liver, he desired that the land should be sold and the proceeds paid to the Baptist Male School, about to open at Owensboro under Professor Gray. The testator had but two children, the son who had died, and his daughter. The daughter survived her father, but died before the daughter-in-law. The daughter devised the land to the appellee as the Baptist Male School was never established. The heirs of the testator and appellee are contesting claimants to said property. Held—That under section 4843, Kentucky Statutes, the devise to the Baptist Male School failed and reverted to the heirs of the testator as in case of intestacy, and his daughter being his only heir had power to dispose of same by will. She could only be deprived of it by the remainder becoming effective, which was attempted to be placed in the Baptist Male School, which failed.

Birkhead &amp; Clements for appellants.

Ellis, Sweeney &amp; Ellis for appellees.

Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

This appeal involves the construction of the fourth clause of the will of William Newton. It reads as follows: "The one hundred and twenty acres of land occupied by Mrs. Lucinda Newton, widow of my son, Slaughter Newton, I will to my daughter, Mary, if she should live longer than said Lucinda Newton; but if said Lucinda is the longest liver, then I will that at her death said land shall be sold and the proceeds paid to the Baptist Male School, about to open in Owensboro under Professor Gray."

The testator had two children, a son, Slaughter, who died before the will was made, and a daughter, Mary, who survived the testator, but who died before Mrs. Lucinda Newton, the widow of the testator's son, Slaughter. The Baptist Male School, which the testator assumed would soon open in Owensboro under Professor Gray, was not organized or opened at any time, so at the time of the death of the testator and his daughter, Mary, such an institution as the Baptist Male School did not exist at Owensboro. The daughter, Mary, assuming that she owned the one hundred and twenty acres of land referred to in the clause of the will under consideration, devised it to the appellee, Southern Baptist Theological Seminary. The controversy here is between those claiming to be the heirs at law of William Newton and the appellee, Southern Baptist Theological Seminary.

On behalf of the appellants it is contended that the daughter, Mary Newton, took a contingent remainder or a defeasible fee in the remainder; that as she died before the life tenant, Lucinda Newton, and the contingency did not happen which would have given her an absolute fee in the property, it descended to the heirs at law of William Newton, the descendants of his brothers and sisters, who are plaintiffs in this action. On the behalf of the appellees it is contended that the devise failed, and that instead of the property going to the testator's brothers and sisters, it descended to Mary as an undevise estate.

Both under the claim made by the appellants and appellees the devise failed, and it should be treated as an undevise estate. The real issue is whether it descended to the daughter, Mary, as an heir at law of her father, or whether the devise prevented her from inheriting it from her father, and thus casting the estate upon those who would have been the testator, William Newton's, heirs at law, had he died intestate and childless. Section 4843, Kentucky Statutes, provides that "unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will, such real or personal estate, or interest therein, as shall be comprised in any devise in such will which shall fail or be void, or otherwise incapable of taking effect, shall not be included in the residuary devise contained in such will, but shall pass as in case of intestacy."

Under this statute the devise failed, no Baptist Male School ever being in existence, and of course no estate in the land devised vested in it at the death of the testator or subsequently. So the clause in the devise with reference to the Baptist Male School does not affect in any way the question as to who inherited the estate.

Where two contingent remainders are created, the one is subordinate or alternate to the other, but the second only vests when the first fails. (Leppes, &c. v. Lee, &c., 92 Ky., 16.) There was no second remainder, because the supposed institution which was designated to take such remainder did not have an existence. The estate which Mary Newton took under the will was a contingent remainder, because it was limited to take effect upon an uncertain event. The estate which she took by it might be designated as a remainder which never took effect, as the event which was to give her an absolute estate never happened. A contingent remainder may be conveyed or devised, yet if the grantor or deviser dies before it becomes effective, then the grantee or devisee takes nothing. As the daughter, Mary, died before Lucinda, the contingent remainder never became effective, and, therefore, under her father's will, she had no estate which she could devise to the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary. If she had the right to devise the estate, it was by reason of the fact that she was the only heir of her father. Of course the life tenant did not take the title to the property. As devisee the daughter, Mary, did not take the title to it, because the event did not happen which was to vest her therewith. The Baptist Male School never took it because it did not exist. As the testator never placed the title in any one, it descended to his heir at law.

"If a contingent remainder be created in conveyances by way of use, or in dispositions by will, the inheritance, in the meantime, if not otherwise disposed of, remains in the grantor or his heirs, or descends to the heirs of the testator, to remain until the contingency happens. This general and equitable principle is of acknowledged authority." (Kent's Commentaries, volume 4, page 257.)

This rule announced by Kent was recognized as correct in Coots v. Yewell, &c., 95 Ky., 367; Herbert's Gd'n v. Herbert's Ex'or, 85 Ky., 145. It is applicable to the facts of this case, because the testator did not dispose of the contingent remainder devised to his daughter, as the Baptist Male School did not exist, and the effect is exactly the same as if the testator had not attempted to make such devise. Suppose the contingent remainder in the one hundred and twenty acres had been devised to a stranger, unquestionably the title to it would have vested in testator's daughter as his only heir at law. If the event contemplated did not happen, then she would not have been divested of the title which descended to her as the heir at law. In this case she was heir at law, and only in one way could she have been divested of that title, and that was, if the Baptist Male School had existed and could have taken the property under the will. As the daughter was the heir at law and the devisee, the title and contingent remainder was vested in one and the same person. The title did not descend on the death of the testator to the descendants of his brothers and sisters, because they were not his heirs at law. There is a technical rule which recognizes a fee in abeyance, but that state of abeyance was always odious and never admitted but from necessity. (Kent's Commentaries, volume 4, page 259.) Such necessity does not exist in this case. The title was not in abeyance, but upon the death of the testator vested in his only child, who could only have been deprived of it by remainder-becoming effective which was attempted to be placed in the Baptist Male School. which failed.

The judgment is affirmed.

---

REED, &c. v. BATES, &c.

(Filed April 30, 1903.)

Street improvements—Construction of statutes—The ordinance providing for the improvement of Zane street was passed while section 2835, Kentucky Statutes, was in force, which provided that the owners of corner lots should be assessed 25 per cent. more than the owners of other lots. But the contract for improvements was not made until after the amendment of March 19, 1898, was passed, which provided that the cost of such improvement should be apportioned equally against the owners in the fourth of the squares abutting on said improvement. The question involved on this appeal is, which statute fixes the basis of the charge. Held—That the rights of the property owners were fixed by the ordinance, and as this ordinance was passed while the former statute was in force the apportionment of the costs was properly made under the former statute.

Lane & Harrison for appellants.

W. W. & J. R. Watts and William Furlong for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division, No. 1.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The only question involved here is as to whether or not the cost of the improvement of Zane street, between Fifth and Sixth streets, by original construction of the carriage way by grading, paving and curbing the same, should be apportioned in accordance with section 2835, Kentucky Statutes, or under the act approved March 19, 1898 (Session Acts of 1898, page 96), which went into effect June 19, 1898, and which act is amendatory of the act of which the section to which reference is made is a part. Under the law before the passage of the act of 1898 the cost of curbing in the improvement by original construction of the carriage way, was to be charged only against the owners of lots in front of which the curbing was placed, except the owners of corner lots were chargeable with the cost of curbing their sidewalk intersections; and if a corner lot had a thirty-foot front and extended back to the depth of the territory assessed, its owner was chargeable with 25 per cent. more than the owners of lots of the same size within the taxing district. By the amendment the cost of grading and curbing, when a part of the improvement by original construction of a carriage way, should be apportioned against the owners of lots in the quarter squares contiguous to the improvement, and according to the number of square feet owned by each. The owners of corner lots in quarter sections are not required to pay for the intersections, and the 25 per cent. more than other lot owners. In other words, under the amendment the curbing constitutes part of the cost of the construction of the street, not of the sidewalk. The ordinance under which the improvement was made was passed June 6, 1898, and reads as follows: "That the carriage way of Zane street, from the west line of Fifth or Pope street, to the east line of Sixth street, shall be thirty feet wide, and shall be improved by grading, curbing and paving with vitrified brick or block pavement, with corner stones at the intersections of the streets and alleys, and footway crossings across all intersections, streets and alleys, in accordance with the plans and specification on file in the office of the board of public works. Said work shall be done at the cost of the owners of ground as provided by law, and all ordinances in conflict herewith be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

It will be observed that it was passed after the enactment of the amendment, but before it took effect. So the section to which we have referred was in force when the ordinance was passed. The city did not enter into the contract for the improvement of the street until after the amendment took effect. The court below held that the apportionment should be made under the statute as it stood at the time the ordinance was adopted. For the appellant it is insisted that as the contract was not made for the improvement until the amendment took effect, the cost should have been apportioned under the statute as amended.

The ordinance was passed with reference to the statute then in force. It did not provide how the cost of the improvement should be apportioned, but simply provided that it should be done in the manner fixed by the statute. It is not the province of the general council, by ordinance or otherwise, to further prescribe the method for the apportioning the cost of the improvement. When it ordered the improvement the statute prescribed the method of apportionment. The ordinance was the basis for the contract for the improvement, the execution of it and the apportionment of the cost. The ordinance and statute then in force fixed the liability on the owners of lots fronting on the improvement and the method of apportioning the cost of it. Whilst it might have been immaterial to the contractor as to which method was employed in the apportionment, because he would probably have received his money in any event, it, however, is a matter of great importance to some of the owners of lots chargeable with the cost of improvement to have the liability enforced only as fixed by law at the time the ordinance was passed. The exact question here was under consideration in Cincinnati v. Seasongood, 46 Ohio, 296. It was held in that case, as a municipal corporation by its proper boards and officers passed a resolution and ordinance, the assessment of the cost should be governed by the law in force at the time of their passage; that a subsequent change in the law could not affect the question of apportionment of the cost. The court took the view that the ordinance was passed with reference to existing rights and liabilities. In considering a similar question, Elliott on Roads and Streets, section 552, says: "Rights acquired in such a case by contract and by proper ordinance should not be impaired by subsequent legislation." There is no clause in the amendment indicating that the general assembly intended the amendment should act retrospectively. It is urged that the general assembly had the right to repeal the ordinance in question. It is a sufficient answer to say it manifested no purpose to do so. Besides, section 465, Kentucky Statute, provides that "no new law shall be construed to repeal a former law * * * as to any act done * * * or any right accrued or any claim arising under former law." * * * The passage of the ordinance was an act done, and when done the rights of the lot owners as to the cost of the improvement were fixed, hence the rule for the construction of statutes prescribed by the general assembly shows that it was not intended to affect any rights which had been fixed by ordinance and statutes then in force.

The judgment is affirmed.

---

MEYER v. ROSENHEIM & CO.

(Filed April 30, 1903.)

Bills and notes—Liability for collecting money on forged endorsement of checks—A bookkeeper for appellees forged their names on checks belonging to them and transferred the checks to appellant, who received the money thereon from the banks. Appellees brought this suit against appellant to recover said money as converted by him to his use. Held—That the bookkeeper had no authority to endorse the name of his employers on the checks, and appellant is liable to appellee for unlawful conversion of their money.

J. K. Hendrick for appellant.

Kohn, Baird & Spindle and Quigley & Quigley for appellees.

Appeal from McCracken Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson.

Appellees are wholesale merchants in Louisville; they had in their employ a bookkeeper named Altman, who forged their name on the back of checks belonging to them, and then delivered the checks to appellant, who paid him the money on them, or sold him jewelry therefor. Appellant then collected the checks from the banks on whom they were drawn. Appellees, on discovering the forgery and the misappropriation of their property, brought this action against appellant to recover of him the amount he had collected on these checks belonging to them under the forged endorsement of their name by Altman. The checks amounted to $227.92. On final hearing the court gave judgment in favor of the plaintiffs.

There is no plea of estoppel, and we see nothing in the evidence to warrant an estoppel if pleaded. Appellees were not required to anticipate a forgery. The bookkeeper had no authority as such to sign the firm's name, and had nothing to do with the checks. He obtained them in fact surreptitiously and without the line of his authority. Appellant appears to have been equally innocent, and so the precise question is on which of two equally innocent persons the loss should fall. In Moss on Banking, section 248, it is said: "If a negotiable instrument having a forged endorsement comes to the hands of a bank and is collected by it the proceeds are held for the rightful owners of the paper, and may be recovered by them, although the bank gave value for the paper and has paid over the proceeds to the party depositing the instrument for collection."

See to same effect 3 Randolph on Commercial Paper, section 1469, 1789, 1777. The case of Farmer v. Peoples Bank, decided by the Supreme Court of Tennessee, 47 S. W., 234, is much like this case. There Head, who had possession of a check payable to Farmer, endorsed Farmer's name upon it without his knowledge or consent and delivered it to the Peoples Bank, who collected the proceeds and permitted Head to check out the money. After this Farmer demanded the money of the Peoples Bank, and it refusing to pay him, sued to recover the amount collected by it on the check. The court held that the logic of the rule, to the effect that a check payable to a certain person can only be properly paid upon his genuine endorsement or to him, necessarily was that one coming into possession of such paper under a forged endorsement of his name could not successfully resist the title of the true owner, or if it had been converted into money, a demand for its proceeds. A number of decisions from other States are collected in that opinion. The rule is that a forged endorsement is a nullity.

Appellant's position then in law is the same as if he had taken appellee's checks and collected the money on them without any endorsement of them at all. The collection of the checks by him was a conversion of them, and he who converts the personal property of another is always liable to the owner therefor. Appellant has collected appellee's money. He had no right in law to the money, and he can not retain it against them. The action is not based upon the writings, but upon the idea that appellant has converted the property of another, and that he can not retain as against the true owner the proceeds of the property. (Bramlette v. Caldwell, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 1123.)

Judgment affirmed.

---

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. v. WHITEHEAD'S ADM'R.

(Filed April 30, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Railroads—Negligence—Cross appeals—Evidence—A judgment for $1,750 was rendered in the lower court as damages for the death of W., who was a brakeman on appellant's train and was killed by coal cars being kicked down a track against the train on which deceased was engaged in repairing a hose between cars, causing a collision of such force as to run a car over him, causing his death. Appellant prosecutes an appeal and appellee prosecutes a cross appeal. Held—That the cross appeal can not be considered as appellee did not move for a new trial, and there can be no reversal in an ordinary action without a motion for a new trial, and grounds filed specifying the errors complained of. Appellant urges a reversal on the ground that the court erred to its prejudice in refusing to give a peremptory instruction for appellant. Held—That the judgment is affirmed as the bill of exceptions discloses the fact that three depositions read on the trial are not in the record, and, therefore, none of the evidence will be considered.

Fairleigh, Straus & Eagles for appellant.

S. M. Payton for appellee.

Appeal from Bullitt Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson.

Appellee's intestate was a brakeman in the service of appellant, and was killed at Lebanon Junction by reason of a collision of some heavily-loaded coal cars with the rear cars of his train. On the trial in the circuit court a verdict was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for $1,750, on which judgment was entered. The defendant moved for a new trial which was refused. It then prayed an appeal to this court. After the case reached this court the appellant waived all errors complained of, except the one objection that the court failed to instruct the jury peremptorily to find for the defendant; but the appellee in this court has sued out a cross appeal.

The cross appeal can not be considered as the appellee did not move for a new trial in the circuit court, and there can be no reversal in an ordinary action without a motion for a new trial and grounds filed, specifying the errors complained of. On the original appeal the question is made that the proof for the plaintiff only showing that he was found injured after the collision between the coal cars and his train, and not showing what he was doing, or how he came to be caught, the peremptory instruction to find for the defendant should have been given. The proof shows that when the intestate's train reached Lebanon Junction it was cut in two, the hinder part being left north of the station and the rear part pulled down south of it, for the purpose of putting into the train the five coal cars referred to. The proof also shows that while they were standing there in this way at night, waiting for the five coal cars to be set in, these cars were pulled upon the main track some distance north of them by another engine, and then kicked down on their train with nobody on them, and with no engine attached to them, colliding with it with great force, as it was a down grade, and after this the intestate was found injured in such a way that he died. It is insisted for appellee that this proof made out for the plaintiff simply the case of a brakeman being injured in a collision, and that a prima facie case was made out. The proof for the defendant tended to show that the intestate had gone in between the cars to fix a hose that was leaking, or help to fix it, and it is urged that he was grossly negligent in putting himself in this place of danger when he knew the coal cars were to be set in. The counsel for appellee, however, urges with force that there would have been no danger in this if the coal cars had been set in properly, as the intestate had a right to expect, and not turned loose to run down on the train; and that, although the intestate was imprudent, still, as the men handling the coal cars had reason to know the crew was on this train and would be endangered by a collision such as took place, the company is liable, notwithstanding the intestate's imprudence, the injury might have been avoided by proper care on their part. (L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Adams, Adm'r, 106 Ky., 859.)

It is unnecessary for us to pass on these questions as the record is insufficient to present them for determination. The bill of exceptions shows that three depositions were read on the trial. None of these depositions are incorporated in the bill of exceptions or made a part of it. There are a number of depositions copied in the transcript, but we can not consider any of them, and as the evidence heard in the circuit court is not before this court, we can not disturb the judgment. (Young v. L., C. & L. R. R. Co., 7 Ky. Law Rep., 165; L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Finley, 86 Ky., 294; New York Life Ins. Co. v. Brown's Adm'r, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 2070.)

Judgment affirmed.

---

HALL'S ADM'R v. HALL'S ADM'X, &c.

(Filed April 30, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Conveyances—Mortgages—Liens—A. sold and conveyed to B. a lot of ground for which he executed a deed, reserving a lien for two notes of $100 each, but B. never had this deed recorded. Subsequent to the making of this deed B. executed a mortgage to appellee, a building and loan association, on this land, which mortgage was properly admitted to record. Suit was brought to enforce the lien to secure these notes, and this appeal involves the priority of liens between the two claimants. The lot had formerly belonged to B., but was sold at a decretal sale and A. purchased same at a commissioner's sale, and a conveyance was executed to him for same. Held—That as the legal title was vested in A. at the time B. executed the mortgage this was sufficient notice to the loan association as to the ownership of the property, and A. is entitled to the prior lien on the property.

W. D. Jackson and A. T. Wood for appellant.

D. L. Pendleton for appellee, Blue Grass Building and Loan Association.
Appeal from Powell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Burnam.

The appellant, James H. Hall, as administrator of T. B. Hall, brought this suit on two notes for $100 each, dated on the 6th day of March, 1880, and due respectively on the 1st of September, 1883 and 1884. The first of these two notes is credited with $60, paid on the 24th day of June, 1886, and the last by $100 on September 19, 1892. Plaintiff alleged that both notes were executed by G. V. Hall to T. B. Hall as part of the purchase money of a house and certain lots situated in Stanton, Powell county, Kentucky, known in the town plat as lots Nos. 10 and 11; that intestate conveyed the property to G. V. Hall by deed and retained a lien therein, which G. V. Hall failed to put on record; and that he had a lien thereon to secure the payment of the notes sued on, which he asked should be enforced by a sale of the house and lot. By an amended petition he alleges that on the 16th day of September, 1892, Green V. Hall and his wife gave a mortgage upon this lot to the Blue Grass Building and Loan Association, to secure the payment of a note of that date for $400, and made them defendants, but alleged that the mortgage lien of the building and loan association was inferior to his lien as a vendor. The building and loan association in their answer allege that when they made their loan to G. V. Hall and took a mortgage to secure its payment on the lot sought to be subjected there was no deed of record from T. B. Hall to G. V. Hall therefor; and that they had no notice of any claim of T. B. Hall against the lot; that G. V. Hall was in possession of the property, claiming it as his own and had been for more than fifteen years, and asked that they be adjudged a prior lien to that of plaintiff. They also deny that plaintiff's intestate ever owned the lots sought to be subjected, or that the notes sued on were given by G. V. Hall as part of the purchase money therefor. The plaintiffs filed a certified copy of a deed made to T. B. Hall on the 30th day of March, 1870, by W. H. Holt, commissioner, which recites that a judgment was rendered in the Powell Circuit Court in the case of George C. Everett v. Green V. Hall, decreeing the sale of two lots in Stanton, Ky., which were numbered on the plat of said town as lots 10 and 11, and bounded on the north by the lot of James H. Scholl, on the east by Main street, on the south by an alley and on the west by the land of James Turley; that pursuant to this decree the lots were sold on the 7th of June, 1869, and purchased by T. B. Hall at the price of $282.25; that this sale was duly confirmed and the undersigned commissioner appointed to make a deed to the purchaser to the premises. This deed was duly certified to the county court for record, and the certificate of the clerk of the county court shows that it was duly recorded. It is conclusively shown that after his purchase Thomas B. Hall took possession of the house and lot and rented it out until about the date of the obligations sued on, when G. V. Hall took possession thereof. There is no record of any conveyance of the title of this property by T. B. Hall. When G. V. Hall was endeavoring to procure a loan upon this property from the building and loan association he made an affidavit on the 21st day of April, 1892, in which he says that he purchased that property from J. F. Clark, commissioner, in May, 1862, and that he paid the consideration thereon, and that the deed was in his possession, but was not recorded in the office of the Powell County Court clerk for the reason that the records of that office were destroyed by fire in 1864, and claimed that he had been in the actual, peaceable and continuous possession of the land from the date of his purchase.

The trial court on this proof adjudged the Blue Grass Building and Loan Association a prior lien upon the property, presumably upon the authority of Holton & Co. v. Alley, &c., 15 Ky. Law Rep., 531, where it was held that where the records of a county clerk's office in which an alleged mortgage was recorded had been destroyed by fire, that it was the duty of the mortgagee to take steps to have the lost record supplied as provided by statute; and that when the mortgagee allowed five years to elapse after such fire, and then instituted suit on the mortgage without having supplied the lost record, one who had in the meantime, without notice of the alleged mortgage and for value, bought the land covered by the mortgage, would be protected as an innocent purchaser for value without notice. But the facts in this case do not bring it within the principle controlling the decision in that case. At the time the building association made its loan to G. V. Hall the records showed the legal title to the property to have been in T. B. Hall, and of which they were bound to take notice. And there is no allegation or proof that T. B. Hall ever owned or sold to G. V. Hall any other lots. Undoubtedly appellee was deceived in this transaction by the report made to them by their attorney, who examined the record and who failed to discover or report the conveyance of T. B. Hall. Appellant has clearly the older and better equity, and should have been given a prior lien in the judgment of sale.

For reasons indicated the judgment is reversed and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

---

GRAY TIE AND LUMBER CO. v. FARMERS BANK OF SMITH'S GROVE, KY.

(Filed April 30, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Bills and notes—Contracts—Verdict flagrantly against evidence—Appellant was engaged in the purchase of cross ties, with its principal headquarters at Evansville, Ind., but N. was its agent to purchase ties in Edmonson county. Appellant contends that as agent he agreed to purchase from seventeen thousand to twenty-one thousand ties from F., who represented that he had that number in the woods ready for delivery, and that in part pay for same the agent executed to F. a sight draft for $1,500, which appellant failed to pay when presented. F. sold the draft to appellant, and it brought this action on same. On a former appeal this court decided that for want of proper endorsement this note was not put on the footing of a foreign bill of exchange but that the same defenses could be made against the assignee as against the assignor. On the return of the case the petition was amended so as to allege that prior to the execution and delivery of the draft appellant had entered into a contract with F., by which it agreed and undertook to advance to him the sum of $1,500, to enable him to get out cross ties for it, and that in pursuance of this contract the draft was drawn by the agent, he being fully authorized to do so. The second trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for the full amount of the draft, from which this appeal is prosecuted. Held—That there is no competent evidence in the record to prove the allegations of the amended petition, and the verdict is flagrantly against the evidence. The proof shows that instead of F. having from seventeen thousand to twenty one thousand cross ties for sale, as he represented, he had only six thousand and eighty-one, and the verdict should have been for the value of this number only at the agreed price and not of the amount of the draft.

M. M. Logan and E. W. Hines for appellant.

John M. Wilkins and Wm. Cromwell for appellee.

Appeal from Edmonson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

The appellant, the Gray Tie and Lumber Co., is a corporation engaged in purchasing railroad ties, with its principal place of business at Evansville, Ind. In the prosecution of its business it had in its employ one C. W. Neal, to purchase cross ties for it.

This agent, on the 21st day of May, 1898, drew a sight draft on his principal for the sum of $1,500, payable to the order of J. H. Flora. This draft was for a valuable consideration assigned by Flora to the appellee, the Farmers Bank of Smith's Grove, Ky., and was by it forwarded in the regular channels of commerce to the place of business of appellant, where its acceptance and payment being refused, appellee instituted this action in the Edmonson Circuit Court.

A trial resulted in a verdict and judgment against appellant for the sum of $1,500, the amount of the draft. From that judgment the case was appealed to this court, and reversed, the opinion being in 22 Ky. Law Rep., 883, to which reference is had for a full statement of the facts, and for the principles of law enunciated by the court.

Upon return of the case to the lower court the petition was amended so as to allege that, prior to the execution and delivery of the draft, appellant had entered into a contract with J. H. Flora, by which it agreed and undertook to advance to him the sum of $1,500, to enable him to get out cross ties for it, and that in pursuance of this contract the draft was drawn by C. W. Neal, the agent of appellant, he being fully authorized to do so. This court in its former opinion held that J. H. Flora having failed to properly indorse the draft sued on to the appellee, instead of the instrument being a foreign bill of exchange, that was not subject to defenses in the hands of an innocent holder for value, it was only in effect a promissory note, subject to any and all defenses which would have been available to appellant as against J. H. Flora.

The second trial of the case resulted as before, in a judgment for the appellee against the appellant for the full value of the draft, and from that verdict and judgment the case has been appealed to this court. All of the questions of law decided upon the former appeal are now res adjudicata, and it, therefore, only remains to decide what would have been J. H. Flora's right of recovery had he been plaintiff in this action. There is no competent evidence in the record tending to prove the allegations of the amended petition, that appellant agreed to advance Flora any money for the purpose of enabling him to get out the cross ties for it. In his deposition, he does say that Neal, the agent, told him that appellant had agreed to do this, but this being hearsay merely, had no potency to establish the alleged contract as a fact, and Neal in his testimony utterly repudiates it; and the contract in writing which Neal delivered into Flora's hands, and which he filed as an exhibit with his deposition, refutes his contention in regard to the advancement.

Neal states that Flora represented to him that he had from seventeen thousand to twenty-one thousand cross ties upon various tracts of land, which were named, which he desired to sell to him for appellant, before they were hauled and delivered on the bank of the river, as was the usual custom; that in order to obtain permission to purchase these ties he made a trip to Evansville, and there stated the proposition to his principal, and obtained from it authority to purchase the ties where they were at 12 cents a piece; to effectuate this purchase appellant drew up a contract in duplicate in regard thereto, one copy of which it retained and the other was delivered to Flora; that when he returned from Evansville, under the influence of Flora's persuasion and his representations that he had from seventeen thousand to twenty-one thousand ties in the woods ready for hauling, he drew the draft in question before going into the woods for the purpose of taking the ties up and branding them; that shortly after the delivery of the draft he and Flora went upon the lands where the ties were supposed to be, and there found in all six thousand and eighty-one ties, which he took up and branded. Flora, himself, makes no pretense to having delivered over to

Neal any greater number of ties than six thousand and eighty-one, so that, upon the second trial, the uncontradicted facts showed in the execution of the contract of purchase from Flora by appellant of the cross ties in the woods he delivered to its agent six thousand and eighty-one ties. The aggregate value of these cross ties, at the contract price, constitutes the sum which Flora would have been entitled to recover of appellant, and as appellee, under the former ruling of this court, occupied his shoes with reference to the draft, that was the sum that it was entitled to recover.

The fact that afterwards, when appellee refused to deliver up the draft for $1,500 in return for the draft for $750, which was drawn in payment of the ties found in the woods by Neal, appellant allowed Flora to retake and dispose of these ties to other parties, did not in any way alter appellee's rights in regard thereto; it knew at the time that appellee was the owner of the $1,500 draft, and it could not diminish the real consideration therefor by any subsequent act in reference to the ties. We are of opinion that under the principles of law settled by this court in the former adjudication of this case, and the uncontradicted facts adduced on the second trial, appellee was entitled to a judgment for the value of the six thousand and eighty-one cross ties at the contract price of 12 cents apiece.

It was immaterial whether Flora's representations as to his having from seventeen thousand to twenty-one thousand ties in the woods were fraudulent, or a mere mistake on his part; as a matter of fact he only had six thousand and eighty-one, and these were taken up and purchased by Neal, and to that extent, and no more, appellant was indebted to him on the contract made by Neal. Nor was it immaterial as to whether or not appellee agreed to surrender the $1,500 draft upon the delivery to him of the draft for $750. Appellant owed it for the six thousand and eighty-one ties, and for that sum it was entitled to recover without any conditions whatever.

The verdict, to the extent that it exceeded the contract price for the six thousand and eighty-one ties, is palpably against the evidence, and for this reason the case is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

---

ROSE, &c. v. WARE.

(Filed April 30, 1903.)

1. Bills and notes—Fraud—Husband and wife—Statute of limitation—Appellant instituted this action to recover judgment on a note for $9,000, executed by appellant. In defense appellant claims that said note was executed pending a negotiation for the purchase of a farm owned by appellee, and that appellant should be liable only on condition that appellee could convey a good title, and that appellee fraudulently represented that he had a fee-simple title, when in fact his title was defective in several particulars, and that the contract was never executed. The parties alleged to own interests in the land were made parties to the action, and appellee by reply denied the allegations of the answer and pleaded that he was the owner of a fee-simple title to the land, and he and his vendors had been in the continuous, adverse possession of it for more than thirty years last past. Held—That appellant had the burden of proving that the sale was conditional, and the chancellor having decided that the contract was completed and was not brought about by the fraudulent representations of appellee, will not be disturbed. One of the defects of title relied on is that the heirs of D. own an undivided one-fourth interest in said land. Her husband purchased a three-fourths interest in said farm, his wife owning the other fourth interest, and thereafter, in 1858, her husband made an absolute sale of the entire farm to T. and placed him in possession of same, which he and his heirs and vendees have held continuously since. Held—That no disability whatever will prevent the running of the thirty-year statute of limitation if a right of action would have existed but for the disability.

2. Joint tenants—It is contended that T. was a joint tenant with the wife of W., and that he did not hold adversely to her. Held—That the evidence is sufficient to prove that T. had ousted W. of the entire possession.

3. Dower—Another objection urged to the title is that a woman has an inchoate right of dower in the land. Held—That said right may never accrue, and if it does appellant can look for indemnity to appellee's covenant of warranty.

W. L. Reeves, W. P. Sandidge and Hazelrigg & Chenault for Billie Rose.

Petrie & Standard for Mary E. Winston, &c.

Perkins & Trimble and W. S. Pryor for appellee.

Appeal from Todd Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

Appellee, E. J. Ware, instituted this action to recover a judgment on a note of appellant, Billie Rose, dated May 9, 1899, and due one day thereafter, for the sum of $9,000.

Appellant in her answer admits signing and delivering the note, but sets up as a defense that it was executed and delivered pending a negotiation between her and appellee, looking to the purchase by her of a farm owned by him, that the terms of the sale had been agreed upon, subject to the condition that appellee's title was found to be valid and was approved by appellant's agent; that appellee's title was found to be defective by her agent, and was rejected by him; that the defects in the title were, first, that he had only a possessory title, at best, to any of the land; and, second, the heirs at law of Parmelia M. Winston, the wife of a remote vendor, owned one-fourth of it; third, that Mary E. Duffy, the wife of another remote vendor, had an inchoate right of dower in the whole tract; fourth, that Wiley Taylor, still another remote vendor, had some interest, or so claimed; that appellee, knowing his title to be defective, fraudulently concealed that fact from her, falsely representing that he had an indefeasible title to the land; that by these fraudulent representations, and the assurance that the note would not bind her for its payment unless the sale was finally consummated, induced her to deliver it to him; wherefore, she prayed for a surrender up, and cancellation of the note sued on.

Upon the filing of this answer the case was transferred to equity upon the motion of appellant. By an amended answer Mary E. Winston, T. M. Powell, Mary Powell and Eliza Powell, the heirs at law of Parmelia Winston, were made parties, and called upon to assert any claim they might have to the land. Appellee, by reply, denied all of the material allegations of the answer, and pleaded affirmatively that he was possessed of an indefeasible title to the land, and that he and his grantors had been in the continuous, adverse possession of it for more than thirty years last past. By a rejoinder the allegations of the reply were controverted.

It is not necessary to set out the allegations of the various pleadings in this case at greater length or detail; for all practical purposes the issues were made up along the lines thus indicated. Afterwards the heirs at law of Parmelia M. Winston filed their answer, which they made a cross petition against appellee, claiming through their ancestor, Parmelia M. Winston, to own one-fourth of the land involved in this litigation. By an agreement, entered of record, it was stipulated that the same issues, made between E. J. Ware and Billie Rose, should be considered to exist between appellee and the cross petitioners, and that all the evidence taken in the case should be read on these agreed issues.

The first question to be decided is whether the transaction which took place between appellant and appellee on the 9th day of May, 1899, was or not, an executed contract. The negotiations for the sale of the farm had been carried forward fitfully for eight months or a year prior thereto. In these negotiations appellant had taken little or no part personally; her interest seems to have been looked after by her mother, Mrs. M. I. Donnelly, who was anxious that the purchase should be made, and who was fully authorized to speak for her daughter in the negotiations between her and appellee. There is a complete failure on the evidence to show any fraud, or overreaching, upon the part of appellee, or to put him in the attitude of being unduly anxious to make the trade; nor is there any foundation, in the record for the charge that he knew or suspected there was any defect in his title.

Appellant's mother, by writing signed by her, offered to purchase the farm from appellee at the price of $60 per acre. Both appellant and her mother state that while they knew this was a high price, they were willing to pay it. On May 9, 1899, appellee called at the house of appellant, where he and Mrs. Donnelly and the appellant consummated the pending negotiations, by his executing and delivering to appellant a deed for the land, and her executing and delivering to him the note sued on. The evidence upon this branch of the case is reduced to the testimony of appellee on the one hand, and Mrs. Donnelly, the agent of appellant, who negotiated the trade, on the other. Appellee testifies that it was absolute and unconditional; Mrs. Donnelly testifies that it was conditioned upon the approval of appellant's agent. The burden of establishing, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the sale was conditional, was upon appellant. Upon this issue of fact the chancellor decided adversely to her, and we are not able to say, from all the evidence in the record, that he erred in so doing. We come now to a consideration of the question of defects in appellee's title.

In the year 1847, Parmelia A. Duffy, the wife of Col. Francis Duffy, died, owning a body of about 920 acres of land, of which the farm involved in this litigation was a part. She left surviving her a husband and four children, F. M. Duffy, Michael E. Duffy, P. O. Duffy and Parmelia M. Duffy. After the death of his wife Col. Francis Duffy remained in possession of her real property as tenant by curtesy until his death in 1858.

On the 24th day of May, 1852, Dr. Thomas L. Winston intermarried with Parmelia M. Duffy, one of the four heirs at law of Parmelia A. Duffy, deceased, and in 1858, immediately after the death of his father-in-law, purchased the undivided interest of his three brothers-in-law in the real estate left by their mother, and he and his wife became the owners of the whole, he owning three fourths and she owning one-fourth thereof. In the same year he sold the whole tract of 920 acres to one Wiley Taylor, for the sum of $44,000, $11,000 of which was paid cash, and the balance to be paid at stated intervals thereafter. For the land thus sold he executed and delivered to his grantee a bond for title, conditioned, upon the final payment of all the purchase money, to convey the land by deed of general warranty. Upon the sale thus made to him Wiley Taylor entered and took possession, and he and his descendants and vendees, near and remote, have held and occupied the land from the time of sale until the institution of this action.

It can not be questioned that Dr. Thomas L. Winston undertook to sell all of the land owned by himself and wife as tenants in common, or that the vendee took possession of it and held it as his own, believing that when he paid the purchase money he would receive a valid deed of conveyance therefor. After thus taking possession Wiley Taylor sold 100 acres of the land to one Dr. Grady, and a small tract of it to the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. In 1860 he died intestate, and the land descended to his children, of whom he had several. In 1862 it was partitioned among his children, who took possession of their respective portions. After his death his son, W. H. Taylor, administered his estate, and paid off the balance due of the purchase price, the last of the notes being taken up in January, 1863.

In 1865 Parmelia M. Winston died, leaving two daughters, Mary E. Winston and Bettie Winston. The latter having married one Powell, afterwards died, leaving three children, T. M. Powell, Mary Powell and Eliza Powell, who, together with their aunt, Mary E. Winston, constitute the cross petitioners in this action. In 1895 Dr. Thomas L. Winston died. On the part of appellants it is claimed that the possession of Wiley Taylor was not adverse but amicable to Parmelia M. Winston, and as the sale by her husband to him did not pass her title, at her death she was in possession and her husband became entitled to a life estate by curtesy, which at once vested in his vendee by virtue of the sale in 1858, and, therefore, no cause of action ever accrued to Parmelia M. Winston, or her heirs at law, until the death of Dr. Thomas L. Winston in 1895, they being remaindermen during that period.

There would be much force in this contention had the sale by Winston to Taylor taken place prior to the act of 1846; for before the enactment of that statute the husband had a vendible interest in his wife's land, which he could sell and which could be sold for his indebtedness, and, therefore, when he alone undertook to sell his wife's land his life estate passed to his grantee, and neither his wife, nor her heirs at law after her death, had a right of action until the termination of the life estate by the death of the husband. But even then, when the wife joined the husband in the sale, whether her act was valid or invalid, the vendee who took possession under the deed was construed to hold adversely to the wife, and the thirty-year statute at once commenced to run against her, and continued to run against her heirs after her death, without regard to the question of disability. This principle is established by the cases of Medlock v. Suter, 80 Ky., 101; Mantle v. Beal, 82 Ky., 122; Bradley v. Burgess, 87 Ky., 648.

Since the act of 1846 a husband has had no vendible interest in his wife's land, and if he undertakes to sell it in fee simple, with or without her joining in the sale, and the purchaser takes possession thereunder, then the wife's right of action immediately accrues to her, and the thirty-year statute of limitation commences to run against her, and continues, in case of her death, to run against her heirs at law, without reference to any disability, and when the statutory period has expired, bars all right of recovery.

In the case of Bankston v. The Crabtree Coal Mining Co., 16 Ky. Law Rep., 15, it is said: "It is evident that the entry of Woodruff was hostile to the title of the female appellant, and his holding adverse to her; but for her disability she could have asserted her cause of action immediately upon his entry. This is true because she did not join in the grant, and as to her the deed of her husband was of no effect. That deed did not convey any right to the vendee. Since the statute of 1846, the husband has had no vendible interest in his wife's land, and as the deed of 1871 must be regarded as his deed alone, the wife's right of action accrued at once."

In the case cited the thirty year statute of limitation was not involved. The opinion is quoted from as establishing the principle that, since the enactment of the statute of 1846, a vendee taking possession of the wife's land, under a sale by the husband, holds adversely to her, and she has, at once, a right of action against him.

In the case of Johnson v. Sweat, 81 Ky., 394, it was held that where, since the act of 1846, the husband alone sold the wife's land, she had at once a cause of action against the vendee who took possession under the sale, and the thirty-year statute commenced to run. In this case the thirty years not having expired, the claim of the wife was held not to be barred. The principle above stated was fully determined.

In the case of the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Thompson, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 1110, the husband, D. B. Thompson, in the year 1856, by a writing, without the consent or permission of his wife, gave the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. the right to build its Knoxville branch road through the center of the wife's land. In 1897 the husband died, after which time the wife instituted an action for compensation. The answer, among other things, pleaded the thirty-year statute of limitation. In considering the validity of this plea the court reviewed and discussed nearly all of its former decisions relative to it, and said: "In the case at bar it is claimed in the answer, and not denied in the reply, that appellant held and claimed adversely to the appellee for more than forty years before the institution of this suit; and, besides, the proof conduces to establish the same fact. It, therefore, follows that there had been an actual, adverse possession, and it seems clear from the statute, as well as the decisions of this court, that appellee's right to recover was absolutely barred by limitation.

The court further said, in commenting on the cases bearing on this point: "The question decided in the last-named case (Gregory's Heirs v. Ford, 5 B. M., 471) was under the law as it existed prior to the act of 1846, and is not at all applicable to the case at bar."

The case of Bransom v. Thompson, 81 Ky., 387, must not be understood as conflicting with Johnson v. Sweat, 81 Ky., 392, decided three days later, for there no question of limitation arose, as thirty years had not elapsed, and the only question before the court was whether the husband was entitled to curtesy on the facts shown under the construction of the statute previously made in Carr v. Givens, 9 Bush, 679.

It is urged by appellants that Dr. T. L. Winston and his wife were residents of the State of Tennessee, which State, from 1861 to 1865, was a part of the Confederate States, and at war with the United States, and that during this period no right of action existed in Mrs. Winston, and that she having died in 1865, pending the war, no right of action had accrued to her up to the time of her death, and for this reason the statute did not apply to her.

In the case of Stilwell v. Leavy, 84 Ky., 379, this court said: "No disability of coverture of infancy, or by reason of the existence of war between the claimant's country and that of the defendant, or any other 'disability whatever,' can save the right to bring an action for the recovery of real property adversely held for a longer period than thirty years from the time the right of action first accrued to them."

From these cases we deduce the rule that no disability whatever will prevent the running of the thirty-year statute of limitation if a right of action would have existed in the claimant but for the disability. It is also contended by appellant that inasmuch as Dr. T. L. Winston and his wife were tenants in common, the husband's vendee, Wiley Taylor, was also a tenant in common with the wife, and, therefore, his occupancy of the land thus held must be construed as amicable, and not adverse. It is true that the general rule is that the holding of one tenant in common is never construed to be adverse to his co-tenant, alone, from the fact that he is the sole occupant of the land; but it is also true that a tenant in common may so act with reference to his co-tenant as to amount to an ouster; and when this happens, his holding will thereafter be adverse, and not amicable, with reference to his co-tenant.

In the case of Gillaspie v. Osborn, 3 A. K. Marsh., 77 (13 Am. Decisions, 136), it is said: "The relations between tenants in common, or even between joint tenants, is not such as to estop one co-tenant from acquiring and holding the possession adverse to another. It is true where one tenant in common, or joint tenant, enters generally, it will be presumed to be for the purpose of acquiring and holding possession for the benefit of his co-tenant as well as himself; but this is a presumption of fact which may be repelled by other evidence."

In the case of Larman v. Hughie's Heirs, 13 B. Monroe, 437, it is said: "That one tenant in common may thus acquire an adverse possession is decided in the case of Gillaspie v. Osborn, 3 A. K. Marsh., 77, and follows, from the concessions made in numerous cases, that even a lessee or actual tenant, though taking possession under his landlord, may convert this friendly into an adverse possession."

In the case of Call, &c. v. Phelps' Adm'r, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 510, it is said: "It can not be disputed as a principle of law that the possession of one of several joint tenants is the possession of all, and that the statute, therefore, does not run in favor of one against the others, unless there be an adverse holding; but one tenant may so enter and hold as to render the entry and possession adverse, and amount to an ouster of his cotenants, and if one is in the possession of, and claiming the entire property by deed, then the holding is adverse and the limitation begins to run when he so takes possession." (Greenhill v. Biggs, 85 Ky., 155; Riggs v. Dooley, 7 B. M., 236; Russell v. Marks, 3 Met., 38; Gossum v. Donaldson, 18 B. M., 230.)

In the case of Chambers, &c. v. Pleak, 6 Dana. 426, the court says: "But it has been determined in the case of Doe v. Prosser, Cowper, 217, and other cases collected in Cruise's Digest, * * * that the possession for a long period, as thirty-six years or more, by one co-tenant in common, or joint tenant, without any account, or demand made, or claim set up, by his co-tenant, was a sufficient ground for the jury to presume an actual ouster."

The question of ouster is always a question of fact, to be determined by the jury, and it may be inferred from the facts proved. The entry of a person under a conveyance which purports to convey the whole property, is equivalent to an express determination upon the part of the grantee that he enters claiming the whole to himself. The receipt, for a long period of time, of all the rents and profits of a tract of land is a fact which may properly be admitted in evidence before the jury to assist them in determining whether there has been an ouster. That one tenant in common has been in possession for a great number of years, without any accounting to his fellow commoners, is proper evidence from which the jury may infer an adverse possession. In some instances such possession has been regarded as raising a presumption of law which the jury are not at liberty to resist.

An exclusive possession under a claim of title for forty years, while the other tenants resided in the same county and failed to assert any claim to their property, warrants the assumption of an actual ouster. (Freeman on Co-tenancy and Partition, sections 224 to 232, inclusive; Buswell on Limitation and Adverse Possession, sections 296 to 302, inclusive, and note in Gillespie v. Osborn, 13 Am. Decisions, 136.)

Considering Wiley Taylor and Mrs. Winston, the wife of his vendor, as tenants in common, we think the evidence in this case clearly shows an ouster of her by him, and, therefore, a right of action in her against him for this wrong. The bond for title shows that he purchased, or at least attempted to purchase, the land in fee simple. He paid $50 per acre for it in 1858; appellants claim it is not worth over $35 per acre now, although it is in close proximity to a thriving town which has grown up since 1858. After getting possession he immediately sold off parts of it, to the exclusion of the rights of his co-tenant; he in no manner recognized her rights, or accounted to her for rents or profits. After his death his children took possession of it as a part of his estate, and partitioned it among themselves. The deposition of W. H. Taylor, who was the son, and administrator of the estate of Wiley Taylor, shows, and he is not contradicted, that the possession by his father of the land was notorious, open and continuously adverse from 1858 until his death in 1860; that he claimed to be the exclusive owner, and acted as such in every particular, exercising absolute dominion over it, and accounting to no one for any rents or profits; that this state of affairs continued, with reference to the land, after his death, by his children and their vendees, near and remote, until the institution of this action—more than forty years; that during all this time he had never heard of the claim of the cross petitioners or that of their mother.

We can not conceive of any act which would constitute an ouster by one co tenant of another, short of physical violence, which has not been shown to have been done by Wiley Taylor, his descendants and vendees, with reference to the land in question; and we are clearly of opinion that Parmelia M. Winston had a cause of action against Wiley Taylor, and against his descendants and vendees in her lifetime, for the recovery of her interest in the land involved in this litigation, and that, therefore, the thirty-year statute commenced to run against her despite the disability of coverture, or the existence of the war between the States, and continued to run against her descendants, after her death, until their right was barred by the expiration of thirty years.

In regard to the inchoate right of dower of the wife of Francis Duffy it may be said that it may never accrue, and if it does, appellant can look for indemnity to appellee's covenant of warranty. No claim of title to the land in question has ever been asserted by Wiley Taylor, the grandson of the original purchaser from Dr. T. L. Winston; on the contrary, he has disclaimed all right or title to it, and executed and tendered a quit-claim deed to the appellant.

As the judgment rendered by the chancellor carries into practical effect the conclusions herein reached, the case is affirmed.

---

EADES v. OWENS.

(Filed May 1, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Conveyances—Fraud—Appellant, after repeated interviews with appellee, succeeded in making a purchase of a tract of land, a store and a stock of goods, for the aggregate value of $3,341.57. After conducting the store a short time appellant became dissatisfied and finally induced appellee to repurchase the property for the sum of $2,000. Shortly thereafter appellant was adjudged a lunatic, and confined in the asylum. His committee instituted this action to set aside the contract of sale made by appellant to appellee, or to recover the $1,341.57, which was the difference between what appellant purchased the property for and the price he sold it for, on the ground that previous to the making of the last trade, and at the time of making same, appellant was of unsound mind, and appellee knowing this fact, fraudulently took advantage of his condition and made said trade, which was unfair and unconscionable. Appellant remained in the asylum but a short time until he was adjudged cured and released. He thereupon was made a party to the litigation, and took charge of it. After much proof was taken the court dismissed the petition. On appeal, Held—That the finding of the chancellor will not be disturbed as he was more familiar with the parties and witnesses than this court, and his finding was apparently supported by the facts.

Joe Bertram for appellant.

S. C. Hardin for appellee.

Appeal from Wayne Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

About January 1, 1901, appellant sold his farm in Wayne county, and at once began looking around for another. Appellee owned a small farm of forty-three acres in the same county at a place called "Alex." He also owned and operated a small country store on his farm in which was kept the postoffice.

Appellant desiring to buy this farm and store from appellee, inspected them several times, having in the meantime opened negotiations with appellee looking to a trade for the property. After two or three weeks of dicker-ing between them the farm and store were purchased by appellant upon the following terms, which were reduced to writing and signed by the parties: Appellant, by the terms of the written contract, was to pay appellee $1,500 for the farm, including the storehouse, and for the goods in the latter he was to pay cost, after deducting a certain amount for such damaged goods as might be found in the stock. The goods were to be invoiced March 1, 1901, at which time appellee was to turn over to appellant the possession of the farm and stock of goods, make him a deed to the farm, and the agreed considera-tion was then to be paid for both by appellant.

The goods were invoiced, by which it was ascertained that they were of the value of $1,841.57. This amount, together with the $1,500 for the land, was thereupon paid by appellant to appellee, and the latter made appellant the deed, and gave him possession of the land and goods. Appellant continued in possession of the farm and store, and conducted the business of the store until March 13, when he became dissatisfied, and at once began to make overtures to appellee to sell the farm and stock of goods back to him. Ap-pellee declined at first to buy back the property, as he had sold all of his effects and closed up his business preparatory to his removal to another State, but after repeated propositions from appellant he did finally buy and receive back the farm and store at the price of $2,000 cash, and appellant then re-conveyed him the property. Some two or three months thereafter it was claimed by appellant's family that he had become insane, and so upon an inquisition he was found by the jury to be of unsound mind, and sent to the asylum, where he remained but a short time, and was discharged by the au-thorities as restored to soundness of mind, after which he returned to his home in Wayne county. In the meantime, and while he was an inmate of the asylum, his father, who had been appointed committee for him, insti-tuted this equitable action in the Wayne Circuit Court against appellee for the purpose of recovering $1,341.57, which sum represents the difference be-tween the entire consideration paid appellee by appellant for the farm and stock of goods and the sum received by appellant upon the resale of the same. The petition set out the alleged unsoundness of appellant's mind, and averred that such was the condition of his mind at the time of the last trade with appellee; and further, that appellee taking advantage of appel-lant's alleged want of mental capacity, overreached and defrauded him in the transaction of buying back the property to the extent of $341.57, and asked judgment against appellee for that sum. After appellant's return from the asylum he had himself made a party plaintiff in the action, and was substituted to the place of the committee, who thereupon withdrew from the case, and has had no further connection with the same.

Appellee filed answer, traversing the averments of the petition, and after numerous depositions had been taken by both parties on the issues involved, the case was submitted to and tried by the chancellor, with the result that judgment was rendered dismissing appellant's petition, and allowing appel-lee his costs, and this appeal was prayed, and is being prosecuted by appellant to reverse that judgment. The record furnishes a great number of depositions and a mass of contradictory evidence. A number of witnesses, mainly members of appellant's immediate family, testified to his unsoundness of mind, which they say began with the death of his wife several months before the trade with appellee was made; that he nursed his wife through a long illness and lost much sleep, and that her death seemed to greatly distress him. Two of his brothers testified to conduct and conversations, in which he manifested, as they thought, hallucinations and fancies, altogether unusual with him. They also testified to his having a fit in a field, and that he was several days regaining consciousness. One witness testified that about the time of the trade with appellee, appellant came to him and asked him to see a young lady in the neighborhood and obtain her permission for him to visit her, which request the witness reluctantly complied with, and when he again saw appellant he told him the lady had given him permission to visit her, whereat appellant said to him: "Ain't you lying to me," and upon being assured by the witness that he was not, appellant shrugged his shoulders and laughed in a silly manner.

One or two witnesses testified to his giving a due bill for barter at the store while he was in charge, without signing his name to it, and his son testified that he was unable to make up the mail on one occasion in the store. Two or three other witnesses ventured the opinion that his sale of the farm and store back to appellee at a sacrifice showed him to be of unsound mind. Upon the other hand, a good many witnesses who are well acquainted with appellant, but not related to him, testified that he was never of unsound mind, but was a man of average mind and considerable skill and shrewdness.

It appears that he sold his farm at a good price, and would not buy appellee's until he had repeatedly inspected it, and his purchase of the stock of goods from appellee was attended with great circumspection, for he required it to be invoiced and had his brother present at the time. During his possession of the store he bought bills of goods from two drummers, both of whom testified that he was apparently thoroughly at himself; seemed to understand what and how much was needed to replenish his stock, and what it was worth, and his purchases were made with caution and at the lowest prices to be had. Quite a number who saw him, and had every opportunity to know his mental condition during the period of his supposed mental trouble, testified to his sanity, and to his acts and conduct, indicating that his mind was sound and his judgment good.

One physician testified to seeing and talking with him about his trade with appellee at, or about, the time it was made, and he neither saw, nor suspected, any unsoundness of mind, or want of mental capacity. There is no proof tending to show that he was urged, or even requested, to make either of the trades with appellee. Upon the contrary, it does appear that appellee was reluctant to abandon the idea of a removal to another State, and indisposed to buy back the farm and store. No witness has testified that appellee said or did anything to induce appellant to make either of the trades with him, or that he in any way employed any sorcery or secrecy in any transaction with him. It appears that appellant was not present when the inquisition of lunacy in his case was held, and it also appears that he only staid a short time in the asylum, and that since his release from that institution he has been entirely sane, has attended to business, and to his own affairs in all respects as other men. Appellant makes no complaint, nor did his committee while he was a party to the suit, of the first contract he made with appellee. His only complaint is as to the second contract, the resale.

The case is a difficult one to decide. The loss sustained by appellant in the resale of the farm and store to appellee was considerable, but if it was the voluntary act of a sane mind, and no fraud was practiced upon him by appellee in the transaction, he is without remedy. It appears that appellee is a man of excellent character, and as already intimated, there is nothing in the record that tends to establish fraud or intentional wrongdoing on his part. Appellant's eagerness to rid himself of the property which he had purchased of appellee may be accounted for upon the hypothesis that he found the mercantile business unprofitable and disappointing. It was doubtless one with which he was unfamiliar, and it is not unlikely that he, as has been the case with many others similarly situated, grew so sick of his purchase, and discouraged over the outlook, that he made up his mind to sell out and quit the business at any sacrifice. Upon the other hand, appellee insists that he has been put to great trouble and loss by his sale to appellant and repurchase of the property, as he sold out his personal effects at a sacrifice with the view of removing to Kansas, and he further claims that there were several other stores in a radius of one or two miles of his store, and that after the sale of the store to appellant, and during the latter's control of it, many of his best customers opened trade with the other stores, under the belief that he had quit business, and those customers have never returned to him. Altogether, and from the causes mentioned, he claims that he sustained a loss of at least $1,000. After a careful consideration of the case, and realizing that it has been fully considered by a just and humane chancellor, whose acquaintance with the parties and witnesses, and familiarity with the record, doubtless gave him a full understanding of the case, and being unable to say that his judgment is against the weight of the evidence, we have come to the conclusion that it should not be disturbed, and it is consequently affirmed.

---

TOWN OF FREDONIA v. RICE, &amp;c.

(Filed May 1, 1903.)

Municipal government—Annexation of territory—The citizens of appellant, a town of the sixth class, by a subscription of about $8,000 or $10,000 and donation of land, induced a railroad company to locate its road and station within 800 yards of the center of the town, which was done, and the station was named Fredonia, according to agreement. The corporate limits of the town did not extend to the depot by almost a quarter of a mile. The owner of the land lying near the depot plotted it off into lots and streets, and designated it as Cassidy & Co.'s addition to Fredonia. This territory was improved by the erection of some buildings, and the town of Fredonia adopted an ordinance providing for the annexation of this territory, including the railroad depot, to the town. More than 75 per cent. of the freeholders of this territory interposed an objection. Held—That the lower court should have adjudged the annexation of the territory, as the best interest of all could thereby be secured.

P. H. Darby and James & James for appellant.

Wm. Marble for appellees.

Appeal from Caldwell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Appellant is a classified town of the sixth class with a population of between 240 and 250. It is an old town, situated in a fertile section. About 1886 the Ohio Valley Ry. Co. in projecting their line of road were about to pass several miles from this town. The citizens interested themselves in an effort to procure its location near the town. As a result they subscribed and procured others to subscribe, for about $8,000 to $10,000 of the capital stock of the company upon condition that the road was located within one thousand yards of the center of the town, and that the station to be there established should always bear the name of the town.

This subscription is alleged to have amounted to, and likely enough was in the nature of, a donation to the railway company. The owner of the land near the town over which the road passed in its changed route conveyed a right of way to the company, including a depot site, upon the express condition that the company should locate and maintain a station at that point, to bear the name of the town Fredonia, until the name of the town should be changed, and then bear such changed name. In other words, the station should always be called by the same name as was borne by the then municipality of Fredonia. The railway company accepted the subscriptions, donations and conveyances upon these conditions, and has erected its station within 800 yards of the center of the town of Fredonia. The station is called Fredonia. However, the corporate limits of the town did not extend out to the depot by a quarter of a mile or more. In the course of time since the building of the railroad a number of buildings, residences, stores, shops, churches, etc., have been erected outside of the corporate limits of the town, in the vicinity of the railroad depot. The owner of the land lying near the depot platted it into streets and lots, designating it in numerous deeds as "Cassidy & Co.'s addition to Fredonia." The population of this unincorporated village is about 140. The board of trustees of Fredonia, by ordinance duly passed, proposed to extend its corporate limits so as to embrace the territory described, including the railroad station. The citizens of the territory proposed to be annexed—more than 75 per cent. of the freeholders—interposed an objection, in the form of this suit, under section 3665, Kentucky Statutes. At the same time they began proceedings to be incorporated as a town of the sixth class under the name of "Kelsey."

In our opinion it would be destructive of the proper government of that community to have it maintained two independent municipalities, where now its population is scarcely able to maintain even one efficient one. The matter of police protection, street improvements, and all the affairs of such a local government, can best be conserved by uniting their efforts, taxes and interests. There is no sound reason why two municipalities, so situated as these are, should be maintained. The arguments in support of it are of that character of selfishness that would retard, if not destroy, any town's chances of growth. "In union there is strength."

The judgment of the circuit court sustaining the objections of the citizens of the territory proposed to be annexed is reversed and the cause is remanded, with directions to enter a judgment of annexation in conformity to the ordinance passed by the board of trustees of appellant town.

Judge Nunn not sitting.

---

SPARKS v. DEPOSIT BANK OF PARIS, &c.

(Filed May 1, 1903.)

Mortgages—Description of personal property—Evidence—Appellee sued D. on a note for $715, secured by a mortgage of same date on "thirty-six head of yearling cattle" on the farm of Leonard Drane, said farm being now occupied by said D. near Lair Station, in Harrison county, Ky." The mortgage was properly acknowledged and recorded. Appellant was made a defendant and answered, claiming to be the owner of eighteen head of said cattle by purchase from D. without notice of the mortgage lien. The priority of these claims are involved on this appeal. Held—That appellant had constructive notice from the record of the mortgage of appellee's prior lien. The description of the cattle was sufficient to identify them. Parol evidence is admissible to identify personal property described in the mortgage.

McMillan & Talbott and Lafferty & King for appellant.

T. E. Ashbrook and J. I. Blanton for appellees.

Appeal from Harrison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

Appellee sued James Dundon in the Harrison Circuit Court on a note of $715, of date October 8, 1900, due twelve months after date, and bearing 7 per cent. interest from date until paid. The note was secured by a mortgage of the same date on "thirty-six head of yearling cattle on the farm of Leonard Drane, said farm being now occupied by said Dundon near Lair Station, Harrison county, Ky." The mortgage was properly acknowledged by Dundon, and soon thereafter duly recorded in the office of the clerk of the Harrison County Court.

In the action appellee sought a personal judgment against Dundon for the amount of the note, and interest, and asked for the enforcement of its lien upon the cattle described in the mortgage. The appellant, Edward Sparks, was made a defendant in the action because he had purchased of Dundon, and claimed to own eighteen of the thirty-six cattle embraced by the mortgage, the eighteen cattle were, however, taken from his possession under a specific attachment issued at appellant's instance, and upon the grounds allowed by section 249, Civil Code, which grounds were appropriately set forth in its petition. By agreement of parties the cattle taken under the attachment were, by order of court, sold by the sheriff, and purchased by appellant, who gave bond for the purchase price, $558, payable to the sheriff for the use of whomsoever the court might direct.

The answer filed by appellant set up the defense that he was a bona fide purchaser of the eighteen cattle without actual notice of appellee's mortgage, and denied that the cattle thus purchased by him were included in appellee's mortgage. Upon the trial the decision of the chancellor was in favor of appellee, and judgment was accordingly entered sustaining the attachment enforcing appellee's mortgage lien, and directing the payment to it of the sum received by the sheriff upon the sale of the cattle, less the costs of the sale, and of feeding the cattle while held under attachment. Appellant complains of that judgment, and seeks its reversal by this appeal. The only question necessary to be determined is whether or not the description of the cattle contained in the mortgage was sufficient to give appellant constructive notice of appellee's lien thereon.

The mortgage was executed October 8, 1900, and the cattle were bought by appellant at public auction in Paris, Ky., September 1, 1901. It is conclusively shown by the evidence that appellee furnished the money to Dundon with which to pay for the thirty six cattle on or about October 1, 1900, with the agreement between them that it was to be secured by the execution of the mortgage as soon as the purchase of all the cattle was completed, which was done on the 8th of the same month. It is equally clear from the proof that the thirty-six head of cattle ranged in age from six months to eleven months, or, to be more specific, they were, according to the proof, purchased from the following persons, and as of the ages opposite the names of such persons, respectively: Of Phelps, two head, age eight months; of Worthington, five head, age six months; of Bently, one head, age six months; of Garnett, thirteen head, age eleven months; of Smith, eleven head, age nine months; of Leach, four head, age nine months. Total, thirty-six head.

These cattle at the date of the mortgage were what are called by some of the witnesses "short yearlings," but at the date of the sale from Dundon to appellant, September 1, 1901, a little less than eleven months after the execution of the mortgage, they were what is known among stockmen as "long yearlings." In other words, in stockmen's parlance, cattle about, or approximately near, one year of age, are called "short yearlings;" after entering the second year, and before completing it, they are called "long yearlings." So there was nothing misleading in these cattle being denominated "yearling" cattle in the mortgage, for though six of them appear to have been six months old, the others were from nine to eleven months old. The appellant had constructive notice of the existence of the mortgage lien when he purchased eighteen of the cattle of Dundon, for the mortgage was then, and had for months been, a matter of record, and in law he must be regarded as having knowledge of that fact. Suppose he had gone to the clerk's office of Harrison county and examined the mortgage as there recorded. It would have informed him that it embraced "thirty-six head of yearling cattle" that Dundon owned, and had on the Leonard Drane farm in Harrison county at the date of the mortgage, viz, October 8, 1900. This description was enough to put him upon inquiry, which if pursued would have resulted in his being advised of the fact that the eighteen head of cattle he was about to purchase were a part of those covered by the mortgage, and the recital in the mortgage was sufficient of itself to inform him that the "long yearlings" that Dundon was offering for sale might have been, and in fact were, "short yearlings" in October, 1900, when included in the mortgage. In Jones on Chattel Mortgages, section 53, it is said: "It is not necessary that the property should be so described as to be capable of being identified by the written recital, or by the name used to designate it in the mortgage. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a particular article is included within the general words of a description. Thus under a mortgage of all the stock, tools and property belonging to the mortgagor in and about a wheelwright's shop occupied by him, parol evidence is admissible to show what articles were in and about the shop when the mortgage was made.

* * * Resort must generally be had to parol evidence to identify the property mortgaged, although it be enumerated and described with the utmost minuteness. * * * A mortgage of a certain number of horses in the mortgagor's possession requires evidence dehors the instrument to identify the property; but such evidence would be equally necessary had the horses been more particularly described, as, for instance, had they been described as long-tailed gray horses."

Continuing, the author further says, in section 54: "The description need not be such as would enable a stranger to select the property, a description which will aid third persons, aided by inquiries which the instrument itself suggests, to identify the property, is sufficient. * * * Descriptions do not identify of themselves; they only furnish the means of identification."

Again, in section 64, the same author says: "With the aid of evidence aliunde to identify the property, the following descriptions in mortgages have been held sufficient: 'Eight horses now in a certain stable, although at the time the mortgage was executed, and for some time before and afterwards, other horses not belonging to the mortgagor were boarded in the same stable'—'ten horses in the mortgagor's possession'—'five freight wagons, and twenty-five yoke of cattle, being the train now in my possession.' "

The rule announced by Jones in the foregoing quotations was in effect recognized by this court in Pearce v. Hall, 12 Bush, 209. The doctrine relied on by counsel for appellant, that "a mortgage of a specific number of articles out of a larger number is void for uncertainty, unless the particular articles intended to be conveyed are separated and designated in some way so that they can be separated from others of the same kind," does not, in our opinion, apply in this case. The mortgage in controversy does not embrace thirty-six out of forty head, but all the yearlings owned by Dundon on the Drane farm when the mortgage was made. It is shown by the evidence that Dundon bought four cattle at Dr. Conner's sale about the time this mortgage was given, but it is not clear from the evidence that these four cattle were taken to the Drane farm before the execution of the mortgage. On the contrary, it does appear, with reasonable certainty, that they were not on the farm when the mortgage was taken. In fact the evidence conduces to prove that the only other cattle besides the thirty-six yearlings that were on the Drane farm at the time of the mortgage were two milch cows, neither of which can come under the description given in the mortgage.

Dundon's conduct in selling and disposing of the mortgaged property to appellant does not present him in an enviable light, but his testimony as to material facts is corroborated in the main by other witnesses, who seem to be both intelligent and trustworthy. Though willing to admit that the conclusion arrived at by the chancellor in this case is not free from doubt, we are unable to say that it is against the weight of the evidence.

It, therefore, follows that the mortgage made by Dundon to appellee contained a sufficient description of the cattle intended to be included thereby; that the description was such as to give appellant, at the time of his purchase of eighteen of these cattle from Dundon, constructive notice of appellee's lien thereon; and further, that the cattle purchased by appellant were reasonably identified by the proof as being of the thirty-six included in the mortgage, hence the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

---

SPARKS, &amp;c. v. ROBINSON, &amp;c.

(Filed May 1, 1903.)

County levy—Parties to actions—Constitutional law—Appellant, as a taxpayer of Mason county, for himself and other taxpayers of the county, brought this action to recover of the sheriff a certain tax collected for the year 1902, alleged to have been levied by the court of claims without legal authority. It is conceded in the petition that the whole levy of 62 cents is valid except 3 cents, and that the suit is brought to recover the amount raised by this illegal levy of 3 cents, viz., $2,914.86. On appeal he contends that the levy of 15 cents was illegal, as unauthorized by the Constitution. Appellant owned property for assessment for that year valued for assessment at $20. His share, or interest, on his own showing in the fund involved, is not exceeding 3 cents in any event. Held—That while section 25, Civil Code of Practice, authorizes one taxpayer to maintain an action for the common interest of all, the one essaying to act for all must be a fair representative of the class, and this he must show to be entitled to claim the right. His interest is not large enough for the law to take notice of, and he should not be permitted to maintain this action. The demurrer to the petition was properly sustained for another reason. The allegation attacking the levy of 15 cents as unconstitutional is insufficient. Section 157 of the Constitution limits the amount of the tax levy of the county to 50 cents unless to pay an indebtedness created prior to the adoption of the Constitution or for school purposes. The legislature, by an act of April 29, 1890, authorized Mason county to levy a special tax for school purposes not exceeding 25 cents. Appellant insists that said act was repealed by the Constitution. Held—That the petition is defective, as it does not state whether Mason county had incurred an indebtedness under the act of 1890, which had not been discharged.

Winfield Buckler and W. S. Pryor for appellants.

Thos. R. Phister, Frank P. O'Donnell and C. D. Newell for appellees.

Appeal from Mason Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Appellant, as a taxpayer of Mason county, brought this suit against appellee to recover, on his own behalf and on behalf of all the taxpayers of the county, a certain tax collected by appellee, as sheriff of Mason county, for the year 1902.

At the April term, 1902, the fiscal court of Mason county laid the county levy at 62 cents on the $100, in the aggregate, apportioned as to objects as follows:

Maysville & Big Sandy R. R. fund.....	9 cents.
School fund.....	15 cents.
Free turnpike fund.....	25 cents.
Infirmary fund.....	6 cents.
General claim fund.....	7 cents.
Total.....	62 cents.

It is conceded that the debt on account of the Maysville & Big Sandy R. R. was incurred prior to the present Constitution, and that all the items embraced in the budget, except that of 15 cents for school purposes, are legal. The property assessed for taxation in the county for that year was $9,716,217. It seems to be conceded in the petition that all of the levy of 62 cents, except 3 cents thereof, was legal, on the theory that the fiscal court had the right to levy a tax not exceeding 50 cents for county governmental purposes, aside from providing a sinking fund to meet the railroad debt. Thus, it was presented, 50 cents for general county purposes, and 9 cents for the railroad debt, produced 59 cents of valid taxation. It was then claimed in the suit that the excess of 3 cents was invalid because being in excess of the maximum rate allowed by section 157 of the Constitution, viz.: "The tax rate of cities, towns, counties, taxing districts and other municipalities, for other than school purposes, shall not exceed the following rates upon the value of the taxable property, viz., * * * and for counties and taxing districts 50 cents on the $100, unless it should be necessary to enable such city, town, county or taxing district to pay the interest on, and provide a sinking fund for, the extinction of indebtedness contracted before the adoption of this Constitution."

It was alleged that the 3 cents of excessive levy above named produced, and there was collected from the taxpayers of the county by appellee by reason of it, the sum of $2,914.96. It was to recover this sum, because of the facts stated, that this suit was brought. A general demurrer to the petition was sustained. On the appeal appellant has taken a materially different position in argument. He now contends that the whole of the 15 cents levy for school purposes was invalid, and was in violation of the Constitution. Thus it will be seen that appellant, single-handed, attacks the validity of a tax levy, made and collected, to be applied, and possibly already applied, in aid of the common school system of the county, the total sum involved for that year being not less than $14,574 32. Appellant says that he for that year owned property valued for assessment at $20. His share of, or interest on his own showing in, the fund involved is not exceeding 3 cents in any event.

The right of one taxpayer to sue for all others similarly situated to redress a grievance common to the class to which he is a member is clearly recognized. (Section 25, Civil Code; Hendrix v. Money, 1 Bush, 306; L. & O. T. R. Co. v. Ballard, 2 Met., 165; Whaley v. Commonwealth, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1292; Robinson v. Robinson, 11 Bush, 174; McCann v. City of Louisville, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 558.)

But the one essaying to act for all must be a fair representative of the class, and this he must show to be entitled to claim the right. It was not enough that he should belong to the class whose alleged grievances or property rights he presumes to involve in litigation, but he must show such an interest that the court may see that his motive and financial concern are probably in harmony with at least the average of the body. It will be observed that the Code (section 25) makes this right permissive, which we understand to be in respect of the above rule, and to involve the exercise of the sound judicial discretion of the chancellor. If this were not so, then one with but slight interest in fact, but actuated by some other motive not common to nor in keeping with the welfare of those he would represent, could involve their property in a litigation to be conducted by such skill and labor as he would feel warranted to engage in his own small affair. This should not be allowed. Or, e. g., appellant, with an interest of 3 cents only, volunteers to litigate for property holders whose possessions are over $9,000,000, and whose direct pecuniary concern is nearly $15,000; he proposes to choose for them their lawyer, set the guage of their litigation, control in a large measure the conduct of this to be enormous suit, and have charged to them the whole of the costs (for appellant's proportion of the costs could not be measured in any denomination of money to the law). This is a case to which certainly the maxim "the law does not notice trifling matters" (de minimis non curat lex) applies. His interest is not large enough for the law to take notice of. One so situated will not be allowed to pester the courts and people by raising vexatious litigations over supposed constitutional infractions, for acedemical exploitation at other people's expense. But there is at least one other reason, appearing on the face of the petition and independent of the merits of the case, why the demurrer was properly sustained.

Under section 157 of the Constitution the tax rate of a county can not exceed 50 cents on the $100 of the taxable property therein, except for two purposes: First, if it shall be necessary to exceed that sum in order to pay an indebtedness contracted before the Constitution was adopted; or, second, unless it be for school purposes. As to these two objects there is no constitutional limitation. But appellant contends there was not authority granted by general law for a county to make provision by taxation in aid of the common schools therein, and, therefore, the fiscal court had not the power to levy any tax for that purpose.

By an act approved April 29, 1890 (volume 2, Acts 1889-1890, page 1545), the people of Mason county were authorized to provide, by a majority vote at an election to be held for that purpose, for the levying annually of not exceeding 25 cents on the $100 of the taxable property in the county in aid of their common schools. Section 6 of the act is: "The taxes hereinbefore provided for shall be levied at the same time, and collected and accounted for in the same manner and by the same officers as the county levy is now made and collected by law."

The provisions of the act were duly adopted by the necessary vote. It is asserted in argument by appellant that the local act of April 29, 1890, was repealed by the adoption of the Constitution, September 28, 1891. The petition does not state whether Mason county had incurred an indebtedness under the act of 1890 which had not been discharged. Upon that point the petition is silent. In Campbell Co., Use, &c. v. N. C. Bridge Co., 23 Ky. Law Rep., 2056, concerning the repeal of a local taxing act by the adoption of the Constitution and the general laws thereunder on the subject of revenue and taxation, this court held that if there existed obligations of indebtedness by the local taxing district, the local act would continue in full force till they were discharged. In the case of Richardson v. Boske, Sheriff, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 1209 (at page 1214), it was also held: "We do not, however, decide that the enactment of the general statute relative to public roads and pass-ways, which constituted chapter 110 of the Kentucky Statutes, in anywise affects the liability of district and separate portions of the county for the building and construction of roads under special acts."

The failure of the petition to negative the existence of obligations of indebtedness contracted under the act renders it bad on demurrer. The other questions presented are not decided.

The judgment sustaining the demurrer and dismissing the petition is affirmed.

---

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. v. CRADY.

(Filed May 1, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Railroads—Negligence—Instructions—Appellee and T. were fellow workmen engaged in taking down the structure of a false bridge, when T. let loose one end prematurely and it fell upon appellant's thumb and crushed it off. This action was brought to recover damages of appellant, the petition alleging that T. acted under the direct command of the foreman. A trial was had and instructions were given, in which it did not confine the jury to compensatory damages and a verdict resulted in favor of appellee. On appeal, Held—That the instructions fixing the liability of appellant was proper, but the instruction as to the measure of damages was erroneous; but as the finding of damages was small, it was not prejudicial.

Fairleigh, Straus & Eagles, E. W. Hines and B. D. Warfield for appellant.

Chapeze & Halstead for appellee.

Appeal from Bullitt Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Appellee and one Thomas were fellow workmen in the same line of employment upon a bridge for appellant. They were engaged in taking down the structure of a false bridge. The foreman of the crew of workmen to which these two laborers belonged was present, and it is charged was directing the manner of the execution of the work. Thomas cast loose one end of a heavy beam of timber prematurely, and it fell upon appellee's thumb and crushed it off.

The negligence complained of is that Thomas, in casting loose the beam at the time that he did, acted under the direct order and express command of the superior, the foreman. For appellant it is claimed that Thomas, being in the same line of employment with appellee, was his fellow servant, and that the negligence resulting in the accident, if any one was negligent besides appellee, was that of Thomas, and that, therefore, there can be no recovery. There was proof to support the claim of appellee that Thomas acted under the direct command of the superior, and, therefore, that his act was the same as if the superior had in person done the thing. In other words, the act was not the result of Thomas' judgment, or lack of judgment, or of his care, or lack of care. The controlling mind in the transaction was that of the foreman. Thomas was no more responsible than if he had been a piece of machinery operated by the foreman.

Although there is evidence to support this theory, there is as much, or possibly more, to support appellee's theory. However, the matter was submitted to the jury under appropriate instructions, telling them that they could not find for appellee except they believed from the evidence that the negligence resulting in appellee's injury was the gross negligence of the foreman, but that if it was the negligence only of the fellow workman, Thomas, or if it was caused by the contributory negligence of appellee, but for which the accident would not have occurred, he could not recover. In addition to the above facts it was proven that the foreman was standing within a few feet, and in clear view of appellee, and knew, or might by the exercise of slight care have known, of appellee's danger; also that the foreman was rushing his men at the time, and was drunk. If the jury believed appellee's version and testimony, they were clearly warranted in finding the verdict they did. Upon the matter of the credibility of witnesses, and the weight to be given their testimony, where the conflicting evidence is as nearly poised as in this case, it would be unwarranted in this court to interfere with the jury's verdict. A complaint is made of the instruction defining the measure of damages. It is not accurate, it is true, in that it did not confine the jury to compensatory damages for the injury done. However, the verdict is small, very small, and is scarcely enough to compensate appellee under any definition of that term. It does not appear to us to be possible that the form of that instruction could have prejudiced the substantial rights of appellant.

The judgment is affirmed, with damages.

---

DIECKMAN v. WEIRICH.

(Filed May 1, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Damages—Forcible detainer—Landlord and tenant—Agents—Appellant brought this action for damages against appellee, alleging that he had a writ of restitution issued in an action of forcible detainer, which was placed in the hands of a constable, and that in executing same the illness of appellant's wife was increased and finally resulted in her death. A verdict in favor of appellant for $2,000 was returned and the court granted a new trial, on which the court gave to the jury a peremptory instruction to find for the defendant. An appeal is prosecuted from the order granting a new trial; also from the last judgment. Appellant contends that the constable fully executed the writ the first time, and that a second writ placed in the hands of the constable did not protect either the appellee or the officer. He also insists that after the first attempt to execute the writ appellee accepted payment of rent and made a new lease, and thereby waived his right to the possession of the property. Held—That the first attempt was not a full execution of the writ, but appellee had the right to take out an additional writ and have complete execution of it. The proof shows that some rent was paid to an agent of appellee after the attempt to execute the first writ, and the agent made an agreement to continue the lease. Appellee denied that the agent had any authority to continue the lease, and there is no proof to show authority except the declaration of the agent. Held—That proof that an agent has authority to collect rent does not imply that he has authority to make a lease, and the declaration of the agent alone is not sufficient to prove the authority of the agent. The peremptory instruction was properly given.

L. J. Crawford and Harvey Myers for appellant.

George Washington and Ramsey Washington for appellee.

Appeal from Campbell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Appellant was plaintiff below. His action was grounded upon an alleged expulsion of himself and family, under color of a writ of restitution in the hands of a constable, from a house of appellee, which was occupied by appellant as a tenant from month to month. He says that his wife was ill at the time; that her illness was increased, and that he was obliged to, and did, employ medical assistance, at great expense; that she thereafter died as the result of said alleged wrongs, and that he was deprived of her assistance and company, and was prevented from attending to his usual vocation, to his damage $5,000.

The defense was that appellee, as landlord, had procured the writ of restitution to issue by the justice of the peace in an action of forcible detainer had before him by appellee against appellant; that the constable executing the first writ issued upon the verdict and judgment, had failed to execute it fully because of the ill-health of appellant's wife, and of the then inclemency of the weather; that appellee thereafter caused an alias writ to issue, under which the eviction complained of was made. Appellant claimed that after the first attempt of the constable to execute the writ he again contracted with appellee, and paid him in part thereon, thus creating anew the relation of landlord and tenant. On the issue joined the jury returned a verdict for appellant in the sum of $2,000. Of this amount the plaintiff offered to abate the sum of $1,500, tacitly admitting its gross excessiveness, but the defendant objected, and the circuit judge, after consideration, set aside the verdict and granted a new trial. Upon the second trial there was a peremptory instruction for the defendant, and the case is now here, both upon the action of the circuit judge in granting the new trial and upon the peremptory instruction at the second trial.

Whether the action of the court in granting a new trial after the first verdict was based upon his honor's belief that the verdict was not fully warranted by evidence, or that he concluded that in his instructions to the jury he had committed errors of law prejudicial to the defendant, the record does not show. If upon the former ground, in view of the state of this record (a bill of exceptions and evidence on that trial having been brought up), we could not feel justified in interfering with his action. Not only was the evidence conflicting, but slightly preponderates, in our opinion, for appellee. The trial judge in such cases has a large discretion, which, unless manifestly abused, this court will not venture to interfere with the exercise of. (Louisville v. Johnson, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 685; Richards v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 20 Ky. Law Rep., 1478.)

But on the second ground we are fully satisfied that the trial judge properly awarded the new trial. Among other errors, the following are deemed sufficient for notice. In fixing the criterion of damages the court told the jury if they found for the plaintiff to "fix his damages that he may have sustained in any sum in their discretion, governed by the proof, not to exceed in all the sum of $5,000."

The court instructed the jury furthermore that if the constable had partially executed the writ, and that its further execution was stayed by appellee, "for any other reason, humane or otherwise, nevertheless the action of said constable was a complete execution of same, and his act destroyed all right to have any other or additional writ issue on same at any further time."

The court must have based his action in granting the new trial partly on the error involved in this instruction. The object of the writ is to restore to him adjudged the right of possession, that which he can not otherwise gain; it takes the place of the plaintiff's natural right to repossess himself of his own by his own force. Until it is executed, and fully executed, the judgment is unsatisfied, and the office of the writ is unperformed. (Murfree on Sheriffs, sections 1020, &c.; Freeman on Executions, sections 474-475; Gresham v. Thum, 3 Met., 287.)

On the second trial the evidence for appellant (plaintiff) was materially weaker than on the first. But the evidence that the writ had never been executed in full till the occasion which is the basis of this suit is clearly shown. To obviate its effect appellant had pleaded that after the judgment of eviction, and before the final execution of the writ, he had again rented the premises of his landlord, through one Matti, as his agent. Matti's agency was put in issue by the pleadings. The only proof to sustain it was appellant's testimony of Matti's declarations, not made in appellee's presence, and that Matti had collected two or three installments of rent. Merely showing that one was authorized to collect rent for the landlord, is not evidence of authority to make contracts for renting respecting the landlord's property. It is so well settled that it may be taken as elemental that the fact of agency must be proven otherwise than by the declarations of the one charged as being the agent. There was a total failure in this case to show the fact of such agency. Besides, appellant seems to admit in his testimony that the alleged contract of the second renting was agreed to be submitted to appellee for approval, and none is shown.

The peremptory instruction was proper and the judgments are affirmed.

---

HARPER, BY, &c. v. KOPP.

(Filed May 1, 1903—Not to be reported.)

1. Damages—Negligence—This action was brought against appellee for damages received by appellant, a child six years of age, falling from a pile of lumber and suffering injuries when the lumber was unlawfully placed in the street and left unguarded. The court should have instructed the jury that appellee's liability rests not upon his negligence in the manner of stacking his lumber in the street, but upon the fact that he stacked it there at all, where its unguarded situation became an attractive and accessible object of danger to very young children.

2. Contributory negligence—The court should not give to the jury an instruction on contributory negligence of the child unless it was shown that the precocity of the child gave to it such understanding as to enable it to exercise a reasonable degree of care for its protection under the circumstances, and such proof was not made in this case.

Wallace & Miller for appellants.

Kohn, Baird & Spindle and S. E. Sloss for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Appellant, an infant aged about six years, received an injury by falling from a stack of lumber piled by appellee in a street dedicated and used as a thoroughfare in the city of Louisville.

The recovery was sought upon the idea that appellee was guilty of an actionable wrong by placing his lumber upon a public street without authority from the municipality, and in a vicinity where children were in the habit of congregating in the pursuit of childish sport, in that it was an attractive and dangerous situation to such child; that appellee was aware alike of the danger and of its attractiveness, and of the fact that the children constantly resorted to it to play. The jury was instructed that appellant should not recover unless the lumber was piled so negligently that by reason thereof plaintiff was injured, and not then unless the jury should believe that plaintiff's negligence did not contribute to the injury. The court is of opinion that this instruction in two particulars was erroneous. In the first place, it does not excuse appellee for placing a pile of lumber in a public street and leaving it there without necessity or license, where small children are in the habit of congregating for sport, and where the nature of the thing is dangerous to such children; that the lumber was not negligently stacked. Appellee's liability rests not upon his negligence in the manner of stacking his lumber in the street under the circumstances stated, but upon the fact that he stacked it there at all, where its unguarded situation became an attractive and accessible object of danger to very young children. It was actionable negligence to leave unguarded such an object of danger to very young children, situated as that one was.

The instruction was further more objectionable in that it submitted at all the question of appellant's contributory negligence to the jury, as well as that it was erroneous in form, for it is not enough to constitute contributory negligence that the plaintiff's negligence may have contributed to his injury, but it must be such that the injury would not have occurred but for his own negligence. Children of tender years are presumed to be civilly irresponsible for their acts, and are, therefore, presumed to be incapable of negligence, for before one can be negligent he must have judgment to appreciate the danger of the situation, and to know how to avoid it. This presumption, however, is not always an irrebuttable one; but before the plea of contributory negligence will be allowed as against a child of apparently tender years, it must be shown that the precocity of the child gave to it such understanding as to enable it to exercise a reasonable degree of care for its protection under the circumstances. (East Tenn. Coal Co. v. Harshaw, 16 Ky. Law Rep., 526; South Covington, &c., Railway Co. v. Herklotz, 104 Ky., 405.) This was not shown in this case.

The judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to award appellant a new trial under proceedings not inconsistent herewith.

SULLIVAN v. LOUISVILLE &amp; NASHVILLE R. R. CO.

(Filed May 1, 1903.)

Railroads—Negligence—The foreman of a switching crew in appellee's yard found a torpedo and as a prank placed same in front of one of the driving wheels of the locomotive which passed over it, exploding it, a fragment striking appellee on the leg, inflicting an injury for which an action for damages was instituted against appellant. The court gave a peremptory instruction to find for defendant, from which this appeal is prosecuted. Held—That the court properly gave a peremptory instruction as the appellee company was not responsible for the act of the foreman, as he was not acting for the master in the act he committed, but on his own account and for his own pleasure

Matt O'Doherty for appellant.

Helm, Bruce & Helm and E. W. Hines for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

The foreman of a switching crew in appellee's yard at Louisville found a torpedo among some rubbish in a tool box on the switch engine. As a prank he placed it on the rail in front of one of the driving wheels of the locomotive, which passing over the torpedo exploded it, a fragment striking appellant, a member of the crew, and injuring his leg. It is conceded that the switching crew had no occasion to use torpedoes in their work, and that the use of the one causing the injury named was entirely without the line of the foreman's duty. In this suit by the injured switchman to recover of the master (appellee) damages for the injury the circuit court peremptorily instructed the jury to find for appellee.

The reason the master is liable for the act of his servant at all is because the servant is acting in that matter in the master's stead and for him. Obviously if the servant is not acting for the master, he can not be said to be his representative in that act. So if the servant who is charged by the master with the authority to act in his stead in a given matter, the servant's action, or his failure to act, as the case may be, is imputed to the master as if it were his own. This general doctrine must be too well known to require now the citation of authority to support it. But where the servant steps aside from his employment, and assumes to act, and does act, solely on his own account, in a matter which the master has no more connection with than if he were the most complete stranger, it would not be logical or fair to make the master vicariously suffer for it, for in doing that act, the servant, so called, was absolutely his own master. (Cousins v. Hannibal, &c., R. R. Co., 66 Mo., 572.) Or, as it was expressed by Mitchell, J., in Morier v. St. Paul, &c., R. R. Co., 31 Minn., 351, quoted with approval in Davis v. Houghtelin, 33 Neb., 582: "In determining whether a particular act is done in the course of the servant's employment, it is proper to inquire whether the servant was at the time engaged in serving his master. If the act be done while the servant is at liberty from the service, and pursuing his own ends exclusively, the master is not responsible. If the servant was at the time the injury was inflicted acting for himself, and as his own master pro tempore, the master is not liable. If the servant step aside from his master's business, for however short a time, to do an act not connected with such business, the relation of master and servant is for the time suspended."

In Smith v. N. Y. &c., R. Co., 78 Hun. (N. Y.), 524, the master was held not liable for the act of its station agent in placing a torpedo upon its railway track by the agent for his own amusement, and not for the purpose of signaling a train, whereby a third person was injured. (Marion v. Chicago, &c., R. R. Co., 13 N. W. Rep., 415; Craft v. Allison, 4 B. & Ald., 590.)

This court in Smith v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 95 Ky., 111, held that where the servant acts for his master, and in furtherance of his master's business entrusted to him, the master is liable for his excessive act, or tort; but that if the servant in the act was acting for himself, to gratify some personal purpose, and independent of any duty to or business of his master, the latter would not be liable. A distinction is made where the person injured is a passenger, under the peculiar and high obligation of the carrier to transport him in safety.

In argument it is rather admitted that the foreman in placing the torpedo on the track was acting outside of his employment, and for that act appellee was not responsible; but it is argued for the failure of the foreman to remove the torpedo, which he knew was on the track and almost certain to explode, and possibly do injury, the master is liable. While the argument is specious, its application is not practical. The act of the foreman in placing and leaving the torpedo on the track was one continuing act, having in view but one object, namely, the explosion of the torpedo, that its noise might frighten the engineer or fireman. It is not possible to segregate this one continuous act so that it could be said that in part of it the servant was acting for himself, and in another part he was acting for his master. In truth it was conceived, set in motion and consummated in furtherance alone of the servant's own purpose, entirely disconnected from any duty whatever imposed by his employment.

The case of Ry. Co. v. Shields, 47 Ohio St., 387, is relied on. In that case some trainmen placed a torpedo on the track in front of a portion of their train, intending to frighten some ladies by its explosion when the cars passed over it. However, it failed to explode. The trainmen negligently left it there, exposed at a place where small children were in the habit of passing. Later, a child found it, was attracted by its appearance, and exploded it, to his injury. The railway company was held liable, because it was said that the servant (the conductor of the train) was charged with safely keeping the dangerous implements of the master committed to his care in the discharge of the master's business. This doctrine, carried to its full logical result, would mean that any injury done by a servant with the master's property in the servant's care would bind the master. As, for example, a brakeman on a railroad train who would assault a stranger with a coupling pin in use about his train; or, if the fireman on an engine should purposely and maliciously throw a lump of coal at some one, a stranger standing beside the roadway, and injure him; or, if in the case at bar, the foreman had for fun thrown the torpedo at appellant and injured him. The best considered and most numerous authorities do not draw the line at whether the servant is using his master's property when inflicting the injury in question, but whether he is then representing the master in the act and in the scope of his employment.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

---

SCHUSTER v. BARBER ASPHALT PAVING CO.

(Filed May 5, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Street improvements—This is an appeal from a judgment enforcing a lien under apportionment warrants issued against appellant's property for the improvement of Baxter avenue, under contracts made by direction of the council. Appellant's property lies on both sides of Baxter avenue, and the ordinance directs that the lien be enforced on property 192 feet back from said avenue. Appellant complains that the apportionment of cost was made on the wrong basis. Held—That the basis of apportionment proposed by appellant would impose greater cost on her than the basis already adopted, and, therefore, the assessment will not be disturbed as appellant has failed to show that a material benefit would result to her from a reapportionment under a different and correct method.

Lane & Harrison for appellant.

Wm. Furlong for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

It appears from the record in this case that appellant owns land on Baxter avenue in the city of Louisville. Baxter avenue was formerly the Bardstown turnpike road, the territory on either side of and contiguous to it having been annexed to the city in 1894, and the turnpike company having conveyed the road to the city, its importance as a thoroughfare necessitated its being converted into a street, which was accordingly done in 1900, by grading, curbing and paving it with asphalt.

The work of constructing the street in front of appellant's property seems to have been done under two separate contracts. The first from Beechwood avenue to Midland avenue, which goes to about the center of appellant's land, and the second from Midland avenue to Farmdale avenue. The entire work appears to have been done under ordinance duly enacted and approved, by contracts made in pursuance thereof, and by proper apportionment of the cost of the improvement. In other words, the petition and exhibits appear to make out a prima facie case entitling appellee, as the contractor in the work of constructing the street in front of appellant's land, to enforce the lien existing on the same for the amount due it on the work as shown by apportionment warrants duly issued by the board of public works. At any rate, such was the opinion of the lower court, and consequently the judgment appealed from was rendered in this action allowing appellee the lien, and adjudging its enforcement by a sale of appellant's land, or enough thereof to pay the sum contained in the apportionment warrant, and the costs of the action. Appellant objects to the manner in which the cost of the improvement was apportioned, and it is contended by her counsel that because a part of the property along the line of the improved street was defined into squares the ordinance for that reason was void, or at any rate, that the apportionment is excessive and erroneous. This court has repeatedly announced that such an ordinance is not void, and that a reappointment may be made by the court in the event of error on the part of the council as to the manner of the apportionment adopted by it. We find from the record that Baxter avenue was improved from Beechwood avenue to Midland avenue; north of Baxter avenue the next principal street running parallel with it is East Broadway, 384 feet distant from Baxter avenue. One-half of this distance is 192 feet. On the south side of Baxter avenue the property is not throughout its entire length divided into squares, part of the distance embracing appellant's land nearly 300 feet back. There is no intervening street between Baxter avenue and Von Borries avenue.

The ordinance adopted by the general council for the improvement fixed the depth of the assessment at 192 feet on each side of Baxter avenue. On the north side of Baxter avenue 192 feet is one-half the distance to East Broadway. Appellant owns entirely through from Baxter avenue to Von Borries avenue, a distance of 1,100 feet. To go back, therefore, half the distance to Von Borries avenue, the full length of the improvement, would, it appears, include for assessment over 550 feet in depth of appellant's land instead of the 192 feet in depth with which she has been assessed. If under the apportionment as fixed she would pay for the improvement of the street at $1 per front foot, by the other method suggested she would be charged $2.50 per front foot. But the assessment, as made, is the same on each side of the street, viz., 192 feet in depth.

The square which appellant claims to exist is bounded on the southerly side by Von Borries avenue. If so, it would seem that it should be treated as a public way in appellant's block, that is, between Rosewood and Edenside avenues, which would constitute a block from Baxter avenue to Von Borries avenue 1,100 feet deep, through the whole of which appellant's lot would extent. It appears, however, from the record, that the general council of the city of Louisville had not accepted the dedication of Von Borries avenue as a public street at the time of the passage of the ordinance for the improvement of Baxter avenue, or at the date of making the assessment for that improvement, and it could not have become a public street without such acceptance. (Acts 1902, page 172.) We are of opinion that the cost to appellant under the appointment made is less than it would have been under the plan contended for by her.

This court has repeatedly held that it will not disturb an assessment made by apportionment for the construction of a street unless it is shown that a material benefit would result to the property owner from a reapportionment under a different and correct method. (Barret v. Falls City Art. Stone Co., 21 Ky. Law Rep., 670; Levi v. Coyne, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 492.) But the most recent declarations from this court of this doctrine may be found in Barber Asphalt Paving Co. v. Gaar, &c., ante, 2287, opinion delivered April 22, 1903, and Zender, &c. v. Barber Asphalt Co., ante, 2299, opinion of April 28, 1903.

Other matters of resistance to the apportionment in this case, besides those herein discussed, are urged in the brief of counsel for appellant, but as they seem to have been expressly waived of record, they will not be considered.

We regard the grounds urged as insufficient to authorize a reversal, and the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

SNYDER, &amp; CO. v. BARBER ASPHALT PAVING CO.

(Filed May 5, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Street improvement—This is an action against appellants to enforce a lien against their property under an apportionment warrant for street improvement. The defense is made that the territory contiguous to the property was defined by streets and squares, and that the assessment was unequal and unfair. Held—That the rule has been adopted by this court to the effect that it is incumbent on persons complaining of such assessment to show that the method they propose would have lessened the cost to him, or would have been beneficial to him in any respect. Appellants have not shown a better method of assessment than was adopted.

Lane & Harrison for appellants.

William Furlong for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

On the 6th day of March, 1901, the appellee filed its petition in the Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division, against appellants, seeking to enforce liens on appellants' property, situated on and adjacent to Baxter avenue, in the city of Louisville, Ky. Appellee claimed the liens existed for the payment to it of certain sums wanted for the original construction and improvement of the avenue, by grading, curbing, and paving with asphalt; that the work was performed under contract with the city, and after the council had duly passed an ordinance, directing the improvement to be made and alleging in detail the steps taken by the board of public works, the city council, and all other matters pertaining to the letting of the contract, and the apportionment of the cost to the owners of the property along the avenue. The appellants by their answer controverted appellee's petition, but it will not be necessary to notice any defense made by them, except the one made in the third paragraph of their answer, for the reason that the parties made an agreement, which is copied in the record, as follows: "On this appeal the defendants, H. R. Snyder and Tom Zehender, rely solely on the defense set up in the third paragraph of the answer of H. R. Snyder, filed May 11, 1901, and all other defenses are expressly waived."

In the petition it was also alleged that the improvement was the original construction of the avenue; that the territory contiguous to the avenue, where the improvement was made, was not defined into squares by principal streets; that the ordinance fixed the depth, 199 feet, on both sides fronting the improvement, to be assessed for the cost of making the same, according to the number of square feet owned by the parties, respectively, within the depth fixed by the ordinance. The appellants by the third paragraph of their answer denied these allegations, and averred that the territory contiguous to Baxter avenue, and upon each side thereof, and throughout the entire length of the way improved, was defined into squares by principal streets, and that the apportionment of the costs of the improvement as fixed by the ordinance was void, and that the costs should have been apportioned to the owners of the lots in each fourth of a square, according to the number of feet owned by them respectively, and also alleged that by reason of this error in assessment their part of the cost was increased by at least 40 per cent. This was controverted by appellee, and proof was taken and a trial was had, and the court adjudged that the amounts as apportioned and assessed were a lien on the property of appellants, from which judgment they have appealed.

Upon examination of the record we find it to be a doubtful question as to whether or not the territory contiguous to Baxter avenue, in the meaning of the statute, was defined into squares by principal streets, but if it was so defined the appellants failed to prove that an assessment and apportionment on this basis would have lessened the cost to them, or either of them, or would have been beneficial to them in any respect, and under repeated decisions of this court this failure is fatal to their cause. In the case of McHenry v. Selvage, &c., 99 Ky., 235, the court in discussing this question said: "While the record does not show clearly the situation of the property in this respect, the exhibits, maps, etc., seem to show no such division into squares; but if it were otherwise, it does not appear that, under a different method of apportionment, the appellant would be requested to pay less than under the method adopted."

In case of Barrett v. Artificial Stone Co., 21 Ky. Law Rep., 671, the court said: "It is well settled that a reversal will not be had for this reason unless it affirmatively appears that appellant was in fact prejudiced by the apportionment."

In the same book, page 1770, the court said: "The rule is well settled that in order to entitle the party complaining of an apportionment to relief in cases of this character he must show that, under the proper method of apportionment, he would be required to pay less than under the method adopted."

This rule has been followed by this court in several recent cases, and in the case of Schuster v. Barber Asphalt Paving Co., ante, 2846, this day decided, the same opinion is expressed.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

---

WHITE v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed May 5, 1908.)

Criminal law—Sodomy—This appeal is prosecuted from a conviction under an indictment for sodomy, and appellant complains, first, because the testimony did not establish the guilt of the accused; and, second, because the court erred in not pointing out and advising the jury as to the specific acts that constitute the offense. Held—That the instructions given follow the language of the indictment, and are sufficiently specific. Every person of ordinary intelligence understands what is meant by a charge of sodomy, and there was sufficient evidence to sustain the conviction. It was not error in the court failing to give an instruction covering the offense of assault and battery as no such offense is charged in the indictment, except as a part of his assault to commit the crime of sodomy.

M. Barnett for appellant.

C. J. Pratt and M. R. Todd for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Criminal division.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Burnam.

The appellant was convicted of the crime of sodomy, and his punishment fixed at two years' confinement in the penitentiary. We are asked upon this appeal to reverse the judgment rendered pursuant thereto on two grounds: First, because the testimony did not establish the guilt of the accused; and, second, because the court erred in not pointing out and advising the jury as to the specific acts that constitute the offense.

Every person of ordinary intelligence understands what is meant by a charge of sodomy, and the instructions given in this case follow the language of the indictment, and are, we think, sufficiently specific. It is also insisted that the court erred in failing to give instructions covering the law of assault and battery. No assault and battery is charged against the defendant except as a part of his assault to commit the crime of sodomy. This is the offense sought to be punished, and we think the court did not err in failing to instruct the jury for any other offense. It is also insisted that emission is necessary to the consummation of the offense of sodomy, and that as the proof wholly failed on this point, the jury should have been directed to find the defendant not guilty. The decisions on this point have not been uniform, but the drift of the latter decisions, in both the English and American courts, is to hold that nothing more than re's in re, without regard to the extent of the penetration or emission, is all that is required. (Bishop's New Criminal Law, volume 2, section 1127.)

Finding no error in the record the judgment is affirmed.

---

CHINN'S ADM'X v. CHESAPEAKE & OHIO RY. CO., &c.

(Filed May 5, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Railroads—Contributory negligence—In this action to recover damages for injuries to a trespasser in the yards of appellee the court properly gave to the jury a peremptory instruction to find for defendant as the injury resulted from the contributory negligence of deceased in stepping in the way of the engine.

W. T. Cole and A. E. Cole & Son for appellant.

W. H. Wadsworth and E. L. Worthington for appellees.

Appeal from Greenup Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Burnam.

Appellant, as plaintiff in the court below, sought in this action to recover damages of the defendant for the death of her husband, which she charges was due to the negligence of defendant's employes in running an engine against him in their switch yard near the village of Russell, in Greenup county. The lower court at the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence instructed the jury to find for the defendant, which was done. The only question presented on this appeal is whether there was evidence conducing to show any legal liability on the part of appellees for the injury complained of.

The testimony conduces to show that the defendant railway company maintained a switch yard outside of the corporate limits of the town of Russell, which runs parallel with a public road for about a mile, and which is separated from it by a wire fence; that frequently when the county road is very muddy persons travel through the switch yard between the main railroad track and this fence. It also appears that unauthorized persons frequently passed through and across the switch yard. On the morning of October 20, 1901, just prior to the accident, plaintiff's intestate, Thos. W. Chinn, was standing between two of the tracks in the yard, which were eight feet seven inches apart, with a wheel barrow, which he had taken into the yard without permission from the railroad authorities for the purpose of picking up coal which had fallen off of cars loaded with coal. A freight train, composed of about forty cars, was moving slowly to the west on the track north of him, and he appeared to be looking at the wheels of the cars as they passed. Just before the last of this train passed him, a yard engine, with eight or ten loaded coal cars, going east on the track south of him, approached. This engine was ringing her bell, and had blown her whistle about seventy yards before it got opposite to the point where decedent was standing. J. H. Stephens, the fireman on this locomotive, who was introduced as a witness, for the plaintiff, testified "that the decedent was standing with his wheelbarrow about middle ways between the two tracks, with his back to the track on which the switch engine was moving; and that he saw that he was not noticing the approach of the switch engine, and that he thought he might step backwards, and that as they were within four or five feet of him he called to him to look out; that just at that moment he stepped backward against the side of the passing locomotive and was struck by it and knocked down."

There is substantially no variation from this testimony as to how the accident occurred. The engineer operating the locomotive, who was also introduced as a witness by the plaintiff, testified that he saw the deceased and others standing between the tracks for about one hundred yards before he was struck, but that he was in no danger if he had remained in this position; that the locomotive was going at the rate of six or seven miles an hour, and that it was impossible to have stopped the train after the fireman called to the decedent to look out. It seems to us that there can be no room for a difference of judicial opinion under this state of fact as to the cause of the accident, or that it was due to the contributory negligence of the decedent. A railroad company is entitled to the unobstructed use of their private switch yards, and is under no obligations in moving its engines and trains to take special precautions or give special warning to avoid injuring any unauthorized person who may, for his own purpose or convenience, go therein, until the presence of such person in a situation of danger has been discovered. (Thompson on Negligence, 2d edition, section 1760; McDermott, By, &c. v. Central R. R. Co., 16 Ky. Law Rep., 432; Ky. Central R. R. Co. v. Castino's Adm'r, 88 Ky., 182; Brown's Adm'r v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 17 Ky. Law Rep., 145.)

After a careful consideration of the testimony in this case, and the able brief filed by counsel for appellant, we have reached the conclusion that the trial court did not err in directing the jury to find a verdict for the defendant.

Judgment affirmed.

COMMONWEALTH v. BARNEY.

(Filed May 5, 1903.)

Criminal law—Fraudulent disposition of property—Constitutional law—Appellee was indicted under the act of March 21, 1903, for fraudulently disposing of the property of another, and a demurrer was sustained to the indictment and the indictment dismissed. The constitutionality of that statute is involved on this appeal. It is contended that said act violates section 51 of the Constitution, which requires that an act shall relate to but one subject, and that shall be expressed in its title. The title of the act is an act to make it unlawful for a person to fraudulently dispose of the property of another and to provide a punishment therefor. The body of the act does not contain the word "fraudulently," but provides a penalty against all persons who shall sell, dispose of or convert to their own use, or the use of another, property without the consent of the owner. The proper rule of construction is that the constitutionality of the act must be sustained if possible, and, therefore, in cases of doubtful terms or meaning, that construction will be applied which upholds the act if such can be done without doing violence to the manifest legislative purpose. The title is now an essential part of the act, and is, therefore, not only useful in affording a fair index of the legislative intent in case of ambiguity in the context, but it must be read in connection with the remainder of the act as a part of it in determining what is the law. If the enacting clause goes beyond the title, only that part that is in harmony with it, and that is fairly embraced by it, can stand. The legislature intended to include in the acts inhibited those only that were intentionally fraudulent, and the act is not in violation of section 51 of the Constitution. It was the purpose of the legislature in the enactment of this statute to include in the statutes against embezzlements that class of persons in possession of another's property by reason of some fiducial relation hitherto held to be not embraced by the existing laws. The indictment was defective. It should have shown the relation in which the accused stood to the person whose property he is charged with having fraudulently converted.

C. J. Pratt and M. R. Todd for appellant.

Kohn, Baird & Spindle and Bingham & Davis for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Criminal division.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

This appeal involves the constitutionality of the act of March 21, 1902, fixing a penalty for one's fraudulently converting or disposing of the property of another without the owner's consent. It also involves the sufficiency of an indictment drawn under the act.

The proposition is argued that there is a variance between the title and the body of the act; that the title does not express the subject of the statute, and is, therefore, violative of section 51 of the Constitution, which provides that "no law enacted by the general assembly shall relate to more than one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title."

The act under consideration is as follows: "An act to make it unlawful for a person to fraudulently dispose of the property of another, and to provide a punishment therefor.

"Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the Commonwealth of Kentucky:

"Section 1. That any person who shall sell, dispose of or convert to his or her own use, or the use of another, any money, property or other thing of value without the consent of the owner thereof, shall be punished by confinement in the penitentiary for not less than one nor more than five years, if the money, property, or other thing of value so sold, disposed of or converted to his or her own use be of the value of $20 or more; or be confined in the county jail for not less than one nor more than twelve months if the value be less than $20."

It will be observed that the word "fraudulently" is used in the title, but nowhere in the enacting clause of the bill is reference made to intent or purpose of the wrongdoer. From this it is argued by appellee that the legislature has attempted to create the offense and fix a penalty for one's disposing of another's property, or converting it, without the owner's consent; that such an act is far beyond the scope of the title, which restricts within much narrower bounds the class of acts prescribed by the bill. The title and the body of the statute not being in accord, it is argued that the act is, therefore, unconstitutional. The contention of the attorney-general is that the body of the act alone controls; that it is fairly stated in the title, and that it was within the power of the legislature to make the simple transfer or conversion of another's property by one not the owner, without the latter's consent, an unlawful act, and to provide a penalty.

Formerly the titles of legislative acts were not regarded as any part of them. (Attorney-General v. Weymouth, 1 Amb., 20; Hadden v. The Collector, 5 Wall., 107.) At that time acts of parliament were given their title by the speaker, or by the clerk. The courts then disregarded the title, as affording no index of the intention of the law-making body, for the very good reason that that body had nothing to do with the selection of the title. To prevent certain abuses of legislation by the use of misleading titles many of the States now have constitutional provisions identical, or quite similar, to ours. Section 51). So that the matter of selecting an expressive and accurate title is committed directly to the legislature, and its being fairly expressive of the context of the bill is an imperative condition to the validity of the act. It is essentially a part of the act, not only because it has been selected and adopted by the legislature as one of the tests of their meaning as expressed in the bill, but because the Constitution has made it a part, and the controlling part, of the law to which it applies. It is, therefore, not only useful in affording a fair index of the legislative intent, in case of ambiguity in the context, but it must be read in connection with the remainder of the act, as a part of it, in determining what is the law. If the enacting clause of the act goes beyond the title, only that part that is in harmony with it, and that is fairly embraced by it, can stand. (Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 170-181; Endlich Interpretation of Statutes, section 59; Southerland Statutory Constructions, section 210.)

The constitutionality of the act must be sustained, if possible, and, therefore, in cases of doubtful terms or meaning, that construction will be applied which upholds the act, if such can be done without doing violence to the manifest legislative purpose. This is an additional reason why the language, and the whole of it, must be read in connection, including the title of the bill.

That the enacting clause of this statute meant to deal only with fraudulent or wicked conversions of another's property without his consent we find abundant grounds to sustain, even outside of the expression in the title. To apply the terms of the act literally would be so far-reaching that quite frequent injustice and absurdity would result. This compels the rejection of that construction. It is argued for the Commonwealth that motive or intent, not being provided for in the act, are not essential; that many acts are made unlawful by legislative enactment, without regard to the actor's intent. But that statement must be considered subject to its qualifications. (Bishop's New Criminal Law, section 291b.)

While in civil actions the quo animo with which a thing is done may sometimes be immaterial, we apprehend that generally in legal, as always in moral, contemplation crime proceeds alone from a wicked mind. For this reason acts of lunatics, idiots and young children, and of those acting under duress, or under mistake of fact, are held to be not criminal. (Bishop's New Crim. Law, sections 287-290.)

Although some acts are made unlawful apparently without regard to the intent of the perpetrator, a construction that would make a man guilty regardless of the question of intent is not to be preferred. (Bradley v. People, 8 Col., 599.)

A few illustrations taken from every day occurrences will serve to further prove that the legislature had in mind a fraudulent act as the one constituting the evil to be remedied by the statute under examination. A sheriff or tax collector who distrains the goods of a delinquent debtor or taxpayer "disposes of the goods of another without the consent of the owner," in fact. One who carelessly, and without criminal intent, commingles the property of another with his own and then sells it, would be converting or disposing of the property of another without his consent, and would be civilly liable to the owner therefor. (Reed v. King, 11 Ky. Law Rep., 95, 615.)

A common carrier who wrongfully withholds goods delivered to him for transportation is liable to the owner as for a conversion, without regard to his good faith in acting upon the grounds of his belief. (L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Lawson, 88 Ky., 496.)

The plaintiff in directing the service of an execution or attachment, or the officer handling it, who levies the writ upon the goods of a stranger to the writ, or levies upon an excessive quantity, however honest in belief is their mistake, are liable to the true owner as for a conversion. (Hall v. Ames, 2 Mon., 143; Hill v. Ragland, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 1053; Arnold v. Fowler, 94 Md., 497, 89 Am. St. Rep., 444.)

Without further multiplying instances, we may add that any conversion that would support an action of trover, or detinue, would, under the strict construction contended for, make a crime of many an act innocent enough maybe in intent; for, says Biglow in Leading Cases on Tort, 428: "It may be laid down, as a general principle, that the assertion of a title to, or an act of dominion over, personal property, inconsistent with the right of the owner, is a conversion."

We, therefore, conclude that the legislature intended to include in the acts inhibited those only that were intentionally fraudulent. It then follows that the act thus read is not violative of section 51 of the Constitution.

The draughtsman of the indictment in this case proceeded upon the theory above outlined and sustained. The indictment reads: "The grand jurors of the county of Jefferson, in the name and by the authority of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, accuse Charles Barney of the crime of unlawfully, fraudulently and feloniously converting to his own use money of value, the property of another, without the consent of the owner thereof, committed in manner and form as follows, to wit: The said Charles Barney, in the said county of Jefferson, on the — day of July, 1902, and before the finding of this indictment, unlawfully, fraudulently, feloniously, and without the consent of Emma Black, did convert to his own use $42 in good and lawful money of the United States, of the value of $42, a further description of which is to the grand jurors unknown the personal property of said Emma Black, with the fraudulent and felonious intent then and there to permanently deprive the said Emma Black of her property therein, contrary to the form of the statute, etc."

The circuit court sustained a demurrer to the indictment, and the Commonwealth, by the attorney-general, has appealed, to procure a construction by this court of the statute. Even as read in entire harmony with its title, the terms of this statute are very general, and if liberally construed and literally applied would be most comprehensive and far-reaching.

It is true that which is plain needs no interpretation. At first reading this statute may appear plain enough. But it must be studied, because practically it must be applied in connection with other statutes of this State. All criminal laws are necessarily enacted to remedy some evil existing or anticipated. Such was the situation which the legislature had in mind, that it must be deemed to have taken a comprehensive survey not alone of the hurtful thing to be corrected, but of the laws already in force tending to, but which had not fully served, that end. The fraudulent conversion or disposal of the property of another without his consent goes over a wide range of criminal and civil law. In venturing a partial definition of fraud, Wharton's Crim. Law, section 124, says: "The task often pronounced to be impossible, of exhaustively defining fraud, will not be here attempted. It is enough to say that fraud, in a general sense, is the deceitful, unlawful appropriation of the property of another, and a fraudulent intent is the intent to effect such appropriation."

The statutes against robbery, larceny in its two grades, horse stealing and hog stealing, and the statute against obtaining property under false pretense, and other similar statutes, seem to amply cover the range of one's converting the property of another without the consent of the owner, where the wrongdoer is not in the lawful possession of the property. But it was early held that clerks, servants, bailees generally, and particularly officers and servants of corporations, who were in the rightful possession of their master's or bailor's property, were held not liable criminally for its conversion. To remedy this defect in the statutory and common law there was enacted in England, and in most of the States of this country, the statutes against embezzlement, an offense unknown to the common law. In Kentucky the legislation covering this subject has been enacted in piecemeal, and has fallen short of the general policy elsewhere prevailing. For example, we have the statute known as the embezzlement statute (section 1202, Kentucky Statutes), against the fraudulent misappropriation by officers agents, or clerks of banks and incorporated companies, of the goods or funds of the bank, or the corporation placed in their charge, or the property of another in their possession for such master. Section 1203 provides a penalty against fraudulent misappropriation by porters and other servants of common carriers; section 1205 is against the custodian of public bonds, etc., belonging to the State, or any county or other municipality therein; and section 2177 is applicable to innkeepers for similar offenses against the property of their guests.

But until the enactment of the statute now being considered clerks and servants of individuals not bankers, and not incorporated, and bailees, and others who had come into possession of property rightfully, and by reason of some confidence or trust reposed in them by the owner, and who subsequently fraudulently converted it, were held in this State to be guilty only of breaches of trust—not punishable criminally. (Shelburn v. Commonwealth, 85 Ky., 173; Clark v. Commonwealth, 16 Ky. Law Rep., 703; Commonwealth v. Bull, 5 Ky. Law Rep., 605; Snapp v. Commonwealth, 82 Ky., 173; Fairleigh v. Commonwealth, 5 Ky. Law Rep., 854; Lee v. Commonwealth, 8 Ky. Law Rep., 53; Barclay v. Breckinridge, 4 Met., 375.)

This was a patent defect in the criminal laws of the State. The legislature must have had it in mind most prominently, if not exclusively, in passing this bill. If the construction be given to the statute that it included all fraudulent conversions, whether or not done by those in some relation of trust to the owner, it would be made to embrace not only those classes already adequately provided for by the sections above alluded to, in which, in several instances, penalties different from those imposed by this statute are provided, but it would include a class of cases which we are slow to believe was within the legislative purpose. Numerous instances of this class may readily occur to the mind. The term "fraud" is so elastic and comprehensive, so difficult of being even defined by the most capable authors and jurists; may be so subtle as to be recognized only with great difficulty, and only by technical rules; may exist in some degree, more or less pronounced, in so many instances in dealing with such varied classes of property, that a practical application of this construction of the statute, as a criminal remedy, would be attended with such manifest uncertainties that we doubt if the legislature contemplated including this indefinite, if not indefinable, class of fraudulent acts as crimes. It would be more reasonable to suppose that it was intended that these be left to the remedial effect found in the results of civil actions. Nor could the legislature have purposed to deliberately provide two penalties, entirely different, and dependent alone on the whim or wish of the attorney drafting the indictment, for the one act. There is not a reason to suppose that a mitigation of punishment for these offenses was contemplated, either.

It must have been, then, to meet the "breach of trust" cases above alluded to that the statute was provided, thereby making a complete, consistent system of treatment of the subject in hand. It is argued for appellee that the very vagueness and uncertainty of the true legislative intent to be gathered from this act warrant its rejection by the court, to the end, at least, that the legislature may provide more clearly what it meant to prohibit. But such is not the rule of construction, and can not be. It is for the legislature to choose its subjects, and its own mode of expression. It is for the court to interpret the language employed so as to carry into effect the legislative purpose, so far as it may not be unquestionably at variance with the Constitution.

It may be said that the work of interpretation must be confined to the construction of the words of the act. But that manifestly falls short of the true office of the courts. The legislature has used certain language to express its purpose. It is the purpose, then, that must be sought for. It will be presumed, at the beginning of such an inquiry, that the language used will probably best show that purpose. But if it undoubtedly does not, then to stop further inquiry is to probably misapply the legislative will, falling short of its purpose, and, maybe, work a positive and unthought of public evil. The courts, with due regard to the prerogatives of a co-ordinate branch of government, approach this duty with caution, and with a proper appreciation of the distribution of the powers of the government. But statutes of doubtful meaning must be interpreted, or be subject to final interpretation, in event of controversy as to their true meaning, by the courts established by the organic law for that purpose. The evil to be corrected, the language of the act, including its title, the history of its enactment, and the state of the law already in existence bearing on the subject, are all properly considered by the courts in arriving at the legislative intention, because the legislature must have resorted to the same means to arrive at its purpose. As in construing a contract, its context is considered from the standpoint and surroundings of the parties when they made it, so in construing an ambiguous act of the legislature the court will, so far as possible, consider the matters in hand as if situated with respect thereto as that body was. This may result sometimes in the words used in a statute being transposed, or in some of them being omitted or ignored, or in an interpolation of others where necessary to effect the manifest legislative purpose. Says Endlich Interpretation of Statutes, 319: "The authorities would seem rather to establish that the judicial interpreter may deal with careless and inaccurate words and phrases in the same spirit as a critic deals with an obscure or corrupt text, when satisfied, on solid grounds, from the context or history of the enactment, or from the injustice, inconvenience, or absurdity of the consequences to which it would lead, that the language does not really express the intention." (See cases cited, section 293, Ibid.)

In Massachusetts the statute against embezzlement carefully enumerated certain classes of persons as intended to be embraced by it. A subsequent statute, somewhat similar to the one here being considered, was enacted. The question whether one, though embraced by its terms literally construed, was guilty was under consideration in Commonwealth v. Thomas Hays, 14 Gray (Mass.), 62. The court held that the latter act was probably designed to meet a deficiency in the former act, as shown by a recent decision of the court, and that it should be construed in that light. It was, therefore, held that to sustain a conviction under it there must exist "the element of a trust or confidence reposed in a person by reason of the delivery of property to him, which he voluntarily takes for safe keeping, and which trust or confidence he has violated by the wrongful conversion of the property. Beyond that the statute was not intended to go."

We conclude that it was the purpose of the legislature in the enactment of this statute to include in the statutes against embezzlements that class of persons in possession of another's property by reason of some fiducial relation, hitherto held to be not embraced by the existing laws. As embezzlement is that sort of statutory larceny committed by servants and other like persons where there is a trust reposed, and, therefore, where there is no trespass, the main ingredient of which is the fraudulent motive of the fiduciary in depriving one who trusted him of his, the owner's, property without his consent, it is not material that the word "embezzle" should be used in the statute. When the act is sufficiently described it will be classified not by its designation, but by its constituent elements.

The indictment in this case should have shown, therefore, the relation in which the accused stood to the person whose property he is charged with having fraudulently converted. If it had been shown that he obtained the money from the owner because of any special confidence or trust reposed in him by her, as being her servant, agent or the like, the applicability of the statute would be beyond question. Generally an indictment for a statutory offense is sufficient if it follows the words of the statute. But this is so only where the words used in the statute are sufficient to describe every fact essential to constitute the offense; otherwise it is not. (Commonwealth v. McCrary, 3 Ky. Law Rep., 241; Commonwealth v. Stout, 7 B. Mon., 242; Commonwealth v. Shearer, 4 Ky. Law Rep., 343.) The indictment in this case not containing all essential averments, failed to state an offense, and the demurrer was, therefore, properly sustained.

Judgment affirmed.

Whole court sitting.

EAST TENNESSEE TELEPHONE CO., &c. v. ANDERSON COUNTY TELEPHONE CO.

(Filed May 5, 1903.)

Injunctions—Damages on bonds—Illegal acts—Constitutional law—Appellee was about to construct a line of telephone through the city of Lawrenceburg when appellant company, claiming the exclusive right to construct and operate a telephone line in said city under contract with the council, sued out an injunction against appellee to restrain it from constructing its line. Appellee urged as a defense the invalidity of the ordinance granting the exclusive privilege on account of its defective illegal passage. The court dismissed appellant's petition. Appellee then brought suit on the injunction bond and obtained judgment for $2,000 damages, from which this appeal is prosecuted. It is contended that appellee can not maintain the action as it had no legal right to construct and maintain a telephone line in said city on account of the council never having granted it permission to construct such line, as required by section 163 of the Constitution. Held—That this section of the Constitution is mandatory, and the construction of a telephone line through the streets of a city or town, without the privilege having been previously granted by the council, was in violation of the Constitution. The rights of appellee were not passed upon in the former suit. In this action it can only recover upon the ground that it was prevented by an injunction sued out by appellant from exercising a lawful right to occupy the streets of the city with its plant. As it is conclusively shown that they had no such legal right, but were trespassers, they have no right to maintain the action.

F. R. Feland and Humphrey, Burnett & Humphrey for appellants.

Willis & Willis and L. C. Carter for appellee.

Appeal from Anderson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Burnam.

On the 10th day of August, 1899, the East Tennessee Telephone Co. sued out an injunction against the Anderson County Telephone Co., and enjoined them from "erecting poles, posts and other apparatus, preparatory to or necessary to be used in the operation of a telephone exchange, along, over, under or across the public streets, alleys or public ways of Lawrenceburg," upon the ground that by the contract with the city of Lawrenceburg they had an exclusive franchise to establish and operate a telephone system therein. The Anderson County Co. defended this suit upon the ground that the ordinance adopted by the city council, granting the franchise to the plaintiff, did not lie over five days as required by section 3636 of the Kentucky Statutes, and was, therefore, void. This contention was sustained and the East Tennessee Telephone Co.'s petition dismissed. (East Tennessee Tel. Co. v. Anderson Tel. Co., 22 Ky. Law Rep., 418.) Thereupon the Anderson County Co. brought this suit for damages on the injunction bond executed by the East Tennessee Telephone Co. at the institution of their suit. In the first paragraph of their petition they allege "that they had authority to construct and operate a telephone line and exchange in the city of Lawrenceburg." This allegation is specifically denied in the answer, and the defendants plead affirmatively that the plaintiff did not, before proceeding to erect their poles in the public streets and alleys of the city for the purpose of conducting a telephone business, obtain and procure any consent of the city authorities to do so. A motion by the plaintiff to strike this allegation from the answer was overruled, and in their reply they admit this averment to be true; but allege that the city authorities made no objection to their doing so, and aver that this was no concern of the defendant, and that it had no right to rely upon the absence of such authority.

The defendant moved to strike out so much of the reply as plead that they could not rely upon plaintiff's want of authority. This motion was also overruled, and the issues were made by controverting the affirmative averments of the reply. The trial resulted in a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $2,000, and the defendant has appealed.

Section 163 of the Constitution is as follows: "No telephone company shall be permitted or authorized to construct its tracks, lay its pipes, or mains, or erect its poles, posts or other apparatus along, over, under or across the streets, alleys or public grounds of a city or town without the consent of the proper legislative bodies or boards of such city or town being first obtained, but when charters have been heretofore granted conferring such rights, and work had in good faith been begun thereunder, the provisions of this section shall not apply."

This section of the Constitution is mandatory and highly important, and as the Anderson Telephone Co. failed to comply with its provisions, or the statute passed pursuant thereto, it is clear that they had no right to use the streets or highways of the city of Lawrenceburg for the conduct of their business. The question then arises, whether they can recover damages against the East Tennessee Telephone Co., because that company, by injunction, prevented them from doing an unlawful thing. The gist of the plaintiff's complaint is that they were prevented by an injunction sued out by defendant from exercising a lawful right. If they were violating the law in erecting their poles and wires upon the streets of Lawrenceburg without authority of the city authorities, the presumption is that they would have been stopped by these authorities in due course. The question raised by the defense is a new one in this State, although manifestly sound and logical on principal, and we have been cited by counsel for appellant to a number of cases which fully sustain their contention.

In Bangor, &c., R. R. Co. v. Smith, 77 Am. Dec., 246, the railroad company undertook to construct a branch track of their railroad over a public highway in Oldtown. The defendant, with others, denied the right of the plaintiffs to construct the branch track as claimed by them, and interfered and prevented it. After this interference the railroad company brought suit, setting forth their right to construct such track, and that by the acts of the defendant they were prevented from constructing it. When this case was brought to the Supreme Court of Maine it was held that plaintiffs did not have legal authority to construct their track in the way and manner proposed by them. The court then said: "Undertaking what by law they were not authorized to do, and what, if done, would have been the proper subject of an indictment, they were prevented by the defendant from executing their unlawful purpose. The action, then, is one in which the plaintiffs claim damages because they were prevented from doing an illegal act, and for which, if done, those engaged in its commission would have been criminally punishable. It is difficult to perceive how the prevention of an offense constitutes a valid cause of action on the part of the would-be offender, who is interfered with in the commission of his intended offense. It is still more difficult to understand how any damages can have been sustained by reason of such interference. * * * The right to lay the branch track was asserted by the plaintiffs and denied by the defendant. It was the only question at issue between these parties. The plaintiffs attempted what they were not authorized to do, and the defendant resisted, and the court affirmed the propriety of that resistance. If the defendant entered wrongfully on the land of Gen. Veazie, and they were prevented the further prosecution of the plaintiff's undertakings, it may be a trespass for which he would be liable to the owner of the soil, but such is not the subject of this suit, nor is this an action of trespass. If the defendant violently interfered with the laborers in the plaintiff's employ before the branch track they were laying had reached the public highway, he may be liable to them, severally, for any assault he may have committed, but the declaration in this case discloses no such cause of action. The prevention of the doing of an unlawful and unauthorized act does not per se constitute a good cause of action on the part of the would-be incipient wrongdoer, and that is the whole of the plaintiff's case. Plaintiffs nonsuit."

In Macey v. Titcombe, 27 Ind., 137, plaintiffs brought suit to enjoin certain contractors from executing a contract with the city, and obtained an injunction which was dissolved. Thereupon suit was brought against them on the bond. The court held that to constitute a cause of action on the bond the plaintiff must show that he had a lawful contract for the improvement of the street with the city. The complainant alleged that the improvement had been ordered by the city council, and that a contract had been entered into with him for making it; but it failed to show that there had been advertisement for bids, and without such advertisement the contract was void. The court said: "The plaintiff in a suit on an injunction bond must show a legal contract to have been enjoined."

In Hibbs v. Western Land Co., 81 Iowa, 285, the petition in an action for damages on an injunction bond alleged that the defendant caused an injunction to be issued restraining plaintiff from trespassing on certain real estate, and that he was put to great trouble and expense defending the wrongful issuance of such injunction and in obtaining its dissolution, but did not set up what ground the injunction was issued on, nor upon what ground it was dissolved, nor that the plaintiff was thereby prevented from the exercise and enjoyment of some legal right to which he was entitled. It was held bad on demurrer. the court saying: "In order to recover damages on an injunction bond it is necessary that it should appear that the plaintiff was prevented by the injunction from exercising or enjoying some right or privilege which he desired to exercise, and which he was entitled to enjoy. If the injunction in this case deprived the plaintiff herein of any right, or restrained him from taking possession of land to the possession of which he had a right, and the possession was of some value, we think he might maintain an action on the bond. The condition of the injunction bond is that the obligors will pay the damages sustained by reason of the injunction. The gist of the action is damages sustained by being deprived of some right. The petition does not contain an averment that such damages were sustained, and we think the district court correctly sustained the demurrer."

In Turnpike Co. v. Kelley, 41 Ohio State Rep., 144, the company incorporated under the Ohio laws in 1857, and constructed a turnpike from the city of Cincinnati to the village of Warsaw, and established a tollgate at a point more than eighty rods from the city limits. In December, 1869, the city limits were legally extended so as to include the tollgate, but the company continued to collect tolls, when in 1875 Kelley sued out an injunction, forbidding the further taking of toll at said gate, and gave bond, with sureties, conditioned as required by the statute. The final judgment found "the equity of the case to be with the defendant," and dismissed the action. The company sued on the bond. The answer denied that the injunction prevented the collection of any lawful tolls. It was held that notwithstanding the judgment in the injunction suit the company could not recover as damages tolls that it could not lawfully have collected if the injunction had not been granted under the statute.

A suggestion by counsel, we think, admirably illustrates the soundness of the rule: Suppose, says he, that an administrator of an estate finding some person about to commit waste by cutting down and carrying off valuable timber trees, were to procure an injunction and give bond to answer in damages, which should be dissolved on the ground that an administrator had nothing to do with the real estate of his decedent. Can it be claimed that the defendant in such case could bring a suit against the administrator and his surety on the injunction bond, showing that if he had not been enjoined he could have cut down and carried off $2,000 worth of trees?

In the former suit it was decided that appellant could not enjoin appellee from erecting its plant in Lawrenceburg upon the sole ground that its contract with the city for an exclusive franchise was void for failure on the part of the city to comply with the statute in the passage of the ordinance granting the right. The rights of the Anderson County Telephone Co. were not passed upon at all. In this action they can only recover upon the ground that they were prevented by an injunction sued out by appellant from exercising a lawful right to occupy the streets of the city with their plant, as it is conclusively shown they had no such legal right, but were mere trespassers, they have no standing in court. For reasons indicated the trial court should have peremptorily instructed the jury to find a verdict for the defendant.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

Whole court sitting.

---

HALL, &c. v. ROBERTS.

(Filed May 5, 1903—Not to be reported.)

1. Title—Possession—In this action instituted by appellee against appellants as trespassers the lower court properly adjudged that appellee was vested with title, acquired by adverse possession of land for more than fifteen years.

2. Pleading—The petition was not defective in failing to use the word "actual" in describing "possession," but it alleged that plaintiff had "occupied" the land for more than fifteen years. The use of the word "occupied" was tantamount to the word "actual."

3. Judgment—The lower court having tried both law and fact, its judgment will be treated as the verdict of a properly instructed jury, and will not be disturbed, as it is not flagrantly against the evidence.

S. R. Stamper and John C. Eversole for appellants.

W. S. Pryor for appellee.

Appeal from Lee Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

In this action appellee was, by judgment of the Lee Circuit Court, declared to be the owner by more than fifteen years' actual, adverse possession of the small tract of land in controversy, described in the petition, upon which the appellants committed a trespass by cutting therefrom timber of value, for which the judgment of the lower court awarded her damages in the sum of $15.

It is disclosed by the record that appellee is the owner, by title as well as by possession, of a tract of land situated in Lee county, which was patented to Jackson Brandenburgh, Joel Brandenburgh and James Brandenburgh in 1876, from whom and their vendees, immediate and remote, the title of this land, as well as its actual possession, became vested in appellee, who, together with her vendors, has had and held the actual, adverse possession of the same for more than fifteen years before the institution of this action. It appears, however, that included in the boundary of the patent mentioned is another, and smaller, tract, which was patented to Samuel Brandenburg and Henry Brandenburg in 1861. Henry Brandenburg, one of the last-named patentees, died unmarried and childless. There is some evidence furnished by the depositions in the record tending to show that Samuel Brandenburg, after Jackson, Joel and James Brandenburg had procured their patent, sold to Jackson Brandenburg the land included in the smaller, or older, patent, or exchanged it with him for another piece of land in the neighborhood, but it does not appear that this sale, or exchange, was ever reduced to writing. At any rate it seemed to be pretty well known in the community that such a trade had been made, and it appears that Samuel Brandenburg ceased to assert any claim to the land until just before the institution of this action, and the proof shows that Jackson tried to sell it in the year 1900. If such a sale or exchange was made, whatever right or title Jackson acquired thereby went to, and was ultimately vested, in appellee, his remote vendee.

It further appears that after the interval of many years Samuel Brandenburg, about the time of the institution of this action, again set up claim to the land covered by the elder patent, and he sold the timber on it to his co-appellants, which precipitated this suit. About this time, too, Samuel Brandenburg let it be understood in the neighborhood that he and Jackson had entered into a "true bargain," whereby the land in controversy was claimed to have been restored to him. It is alleged in the petition and reply of appellee that this arrangement between Jackson and Samuel Brandenburg was the result of a fraudulent collusion between them to enable the former to set up claim to the land and timber for the benefit of Jackson, and to enable him to sell the timber, he (Jackson) knowing full well that as a remote vendor of appellee he could not set up title to the land or timber as against her. Be that as it may, there was some evidence tending to show such a fraudulent collusion. But waiving the question as to whether the alleged trade between Samuel and Jackson passed title because not in writing, and, therefore, within the statute of frauds, we are not prepared to say that the judgment of the lower court should be disturbed, for the reason that there was some evidence to the effect that appellee and those under whom she claims have for more than fifteen years before the institution of this action continuously had and held the actual possession, adverse to appellants and all others, of a part of the land in controversy, embraced by the elder patent issued to Samuel and Henry Brandenburg in 1861. This is denied by appellants, and attempted to be disproved by several of their witnesses, but it will be borne in mind that it is shown by the record that the elder and smaller patents are both included in the boundary of the land to which appellee holds the legal title. It also appears from the record that Samuel Brandenburg did not know the lines or boundary of his patent, as it was never marked, and while it calls to begin near the corner of one Crump, the only other objects called for are stakes which have, of course, long ago been removed or lost.

Samuel Brandenburg never had the patent surveyed until about the time he was sued by appellee, and according to the statements of some of her witnesses her stable is situated on the interference, or lap, of the elder and junior patents, but whether the stable is so situated or not, the evidence further shows that in the year of her removal to her present residence, which was seventeen years previous to the institution of this suit, her then husband, C. A. Jones, in addition to the building of the stable on the east side of the branch, cleared and fenced a long strip of land running from above the house down to the falls of the branch, which has been in cultivation ever since, and continuously in the actual possession of appellee. This strip, in part, at least, is in the interference of the patent.

It is contended, however, that the petition is fatally defective because it does not allege that appellee's possession is actual. The language of the petition is that "plaintiff and those under whom she claims have owned, held, claimed, occupied, used and controlled said land to well-marked, defined and natural boundaries, for more than fifteen years, more than twenty, and more than twenty-six years next before the commencement of this suit; that said owning, holding, claiming, occupying, using and controlling was continuous, notorious, open and adverse to all the world, especially these defendants."

While this court in Newcome, &c. v. Crews, 98 Ky., 842, and in other cases, declared that a possessory title to be good must be acquired by actual possession of the land in controversy, and that the omission from the petition of the word actual in defining the possession renders it fatally defective, it also said in the case supra that actual possession exists in the "immediate occupancy" of the party. It will be observed that the petition in this case in defining the character of appellee's possession uses the word "occupied" for actual. "Occupy," "occupying" and "occupation," as defined by Webster, is "to hold or keep for use," "to possess," "to cover or fill," so to say that one occupies, or has occupied, land continuously is tantamount to saying that he has, or has had, actual possession of the same, and we, therefore, think that the petition is good and sufficient in its present form without the use of the words "actual possession." But if this conclusion were untenable, while the answer does not cure the omission of the words actual possession from the petition, issue was joined on that point by the parties in the proof introduced on the trial, which, with the judgment rendered, should, we think, have the effect to cure the supposed defect in the petition.

Though the evidence was conflicting, the lower court thought it sufficient to justify the judgment rendered, and as the action was in reality a common law action, though tried without the intervention of a jury, the judgment of the chancellor is entitled to as much weight as the verdict of a properly-instructed jury, and it not being flagrantly against the evidence, no valid reason can be urged for its reversal.

The judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

---

FLOYD v. PADUCAH RAILWAY AND LIGHT CO.

(Filed May 5, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Railroads—Negligence—Instructions—New Trial—In this action by appellant to recover damages for injuries received on the track of appellee, from being struck by a motor car while he was going in the same direction as the car, the evidence shows that appellant was deaf and that the motorman discovered his presence on the track when within 75 or 150 yards of him,, and sounded his whistle and gong, to which appellant paid no attention, nor did the motorman make any effort to prevent the injury until too late to avoid striking him. A trial resulted in a verdict for appellee. A verdict in favor of appellant was previously rendered, but was set aside. Appellant prosecutes this appeal, and complains of the error of the court in granting a new trial; also of the verdict rendered on the last trial. Held—That this court is less disposed to reverse the action of the lower court in granting a new trial than in refusing it. It will not reverse for granting a new trial, although it would have affirmed the judgment if the circuit court had refused a new trial. The court erred in giving an instruction which prevented a recovery by appellant if he was guilty of contributory negligence, and but for such negligence the injury would not have occurred. The jury should have been instructed that if they should believe from the evidence that the motorman did discover plaintiff's danger in time to have prevented the injury to him, but failed to exercise such care as was necessary and was at his command to have prevented the injury, then the jury should find for the plaintiff without regard to plaintiff's contributory negligence.

L. K. Taylor for appellant.

Reed & Berry for appellee.

Appeal from McCracken Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

This is the second appeal of this case. The first opinion states the facts showing the nature of the injury to appellant, and its causes. (23 Ky. Law Rep., 1077.)

On the return of the case a retrial was had, where substantially the same facts appeared as were shown in the opinion alluded to, except that the witness, Martin Rudolph, did not testify at that trial. The jury returned a verdict in favor of appellant for $1,000. This was set aside by the court and a new trial granted upon application of appellee, upon numerous grounds filed, among others that the verdict was not sustained by the evidence, and that it was contrary to the weight of the evidence. At a later term another trial was had, resulting in a verdict and judgment for appellee.

Appellant asks a reversal of this last-named judgment, and that the circuit court be directed to enter a judgment upon the first verdict. This court is slow to disturb the action of the circuit court in granting or refusing new trials where the grounds are in discretion of the court. This is especially so where the circuit court grants a new trial, as it retains control of the case, and presumably the truth will avail the party complaining on a subsequent trial. This court will not reverse for granting a new trial, although it would have affirmed the judgment if the circuit court had refused a new trial. We are of opinion, however, that the rulings of the circuit court in instructing the jury were erroneous in several particulars. It will be remembered that appellant, who was deaf, was a trespasser upon appellee's right of way, walking on its track, going in the same direction as was the car that struck and injured him. He failed to look back and was, therefore, unaware of the approach of the car, and being deaf did not hear the gong and whistle of the motorman. The evidence is pretty clear that the motorman saw appellant for a distance of from 75 to 150 feet before striking him.

The car was traveling about six or seven miles an hour. The repeated warnings not having attracted the attention of appellant, that fact was sufficient, it seems, to have called the attention of the motorman to appellant's danger, and to the fact that the car should be stopped if necessary to prevent its striking him. Instead of doing this, he continued, with but slightly abated speed, until within ten or twelve feet of appellant, when it was too late to check the momentum of the car sufficiently to keep it from knocking appellant down and injuring him.

Upon this state of case the court instructed the jury that appellant was a trespasser on appellee's track, and that appellee was required to exercise "only ordinary care to avoid injury" to appellant, but that as to appellant it was "the undoubted duty of plaintiff to have used all the care and means reasonably in his power to have avoided any injury from the street car, knowing his own infirmities of speech and hearing."

In addition the court seems to have made it impossible for plaintiff to have recovered because of the form of his instructions on the subject of appellant's contributory negligence, because the court instructed the jury that they should not find for appellant in any event, however negligent appellee may have been, if they should believe from the evidence that appellant was guilty of negligence on his part, which contributed to the cause of the injury, and that but for his own negligence he would not have been injured. The court then told the jury that appellant's walking upon the track without looking back was such contributory negligence. We are of opinion that the instructions were objectionable both in form and substance. Without quoting them at length, or pointing out the defects in other particulars, we will say that the court should have said to the jury that if they believed from the evidence that plaintiff's injury was caused by the negligence of defendant's motorman in the operation of his car, by the failure of such motorman to exercise ordinary care to know of appellant's presence on the track and of his danger, then they should find for the plaintiff unless they should believe that the motorman did not discover appellant's presence in time to have avoided injuring him, and that plaintiff, by his own negligence, so contributed to cause his injury as that but for his own negligence it would not have happened. But if the jury should believe from the evidence that the motorman did discover plaintiff's danger in time to have prevented the injury to him, but failed to exercise such care as was necessary and was at his command to have prevented the injury, then the jury should find for the plaintiff, without regard to plaintiff's contributory negligence. The measure of damages was correctly given. The definition of ordinary care was correctly given. After defining ordinary care the court should have defined negligence as being the absence of such care.

For the errors indicated the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to award appellant a new trial under proceedings not inconsistent herewith.

LEWIS v. SCOTT.

(Filed May 5, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Damages for unlawful detention of real property—Rents—Homestead—Appellant brought this action to recover damages for deprivation of his farm, water mill and power for two or three years under a writ of possession issued under an erroneous judgment. A verdict was rendered for defendant under a peremptory instruction. On appeal, Held—That the court erred in giving said peremptory instruction, and should have given instructions embracing the measure of damages set forth in the opinion, to which appellant was entitled. As the land was appellant's homestead he was entitled to its use regardless of his debts, and appellee should be allowed taxes paid, if any, and the value of such reasonable and necessary repairs as were of a lasting nature, if any, put on the premises by him.

Noggle & Graham for appellant.

Henry Woodward for appellee.

Appeal from Green Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Appellee, under a writ of possession obtained upon an erroneous judgment, deprived appellant of his farm of sixty-eight acres, and his water mill and power, for a period of between two and three years. After the reversal of that judgment appellee restored the premises. This suit was to recover the damages sustained by appellant for the wrongful eviction and detention. Proof was heard, and much of it tended to support appellant's claims. However, the trial court, at the close of all the evidence, instructed the jury peremptorily to find for appellee, which was error. Upon what theory that instruction was based we are not informed, nor can we determine.

One who deprives another of the rightful possession of the latter's property, under an erroneous judgment, is liable to the owner for all the damages caused by the wrongful act. These damages are, as applicable to this case:

1st. The reasonable rent of the land for the time appellant was kept out by appellee.

2d. The reasonable rental value of the grist mill for the same period.

3d. The reasonable value of the water power connected with the mill, and used by appellant for propelling his carding machinery, of which power appellant was wrongfully deprived by appellee during the same time.

4th. Appellant's necessary expenses in moving from and back to his premises.

5th. The deterioration of the property while held by appellee, caused by its neglect, or improper use, if any, by appellee.

That the land in question was appellant's homestead appears with reasonable certainty. In that event he was entitled to its use without regard to his debts. (Collett v. Jones, 7 B. Mon., 586.) So much, then, of the matters pleaded as set-off as are involved in certain judgments in appellee's favor against appellant should be ignored, except the value of growing crop taken by appellant when he was restored to possession, which appellee had planted on the land and had practically matured. Appellee should be allowed taxes paid, if any, and the value of such reasonable and necessary repairs as were of a lasting nature, if any, put on the premises by him.

The judgment is reversed and cause remanded for a new trial, under proceedings not inconsistent herewith.

---

PFAFFINGER, &c. v. KREMER.

(Filed May 5, 1903.)

Street Improvement—Void apportionment—This appeal is prosecuted from a judgment enforcing a lien asserted by appellee on the lots of land belonging to appellants for the improvement by original construction of a part of Adams street. The contiguous territory upon each side of Adams street is not defined into squares or principal streets or bounded by principal streets, and the council provided that the property fronting on Adams street, to the depth of 200 feet, be required to pay the cost of said improvement. The territory designated to pay the cost of said improvement extended across the lots of appellants, but did not include the whole of any of their lots. The apportionment warrants issued upon this improvement were more in every instance than the value of any of the lots within the area designated by the ordinance after the improvement was made. The circuit court, however, subjected the whole of the lots to sale, and directed that the apportionment warrants should be paid out of the proceeds in proportion that the area thereof that was within the improvement district bore to the whole of the lot, surface measure. On appeal, Held—That said judgment was erroneous. It was illegal to require that any part of appellant's property not within the improvement district should pay any part of the improvement. Such a requirement would be in effect imposing a personal judgment on appellants which is prohibited by law. The assessment on the lots improved being equal to their value, is equivalent to confiscation, and is void.

Lane & Harrison for appellants.

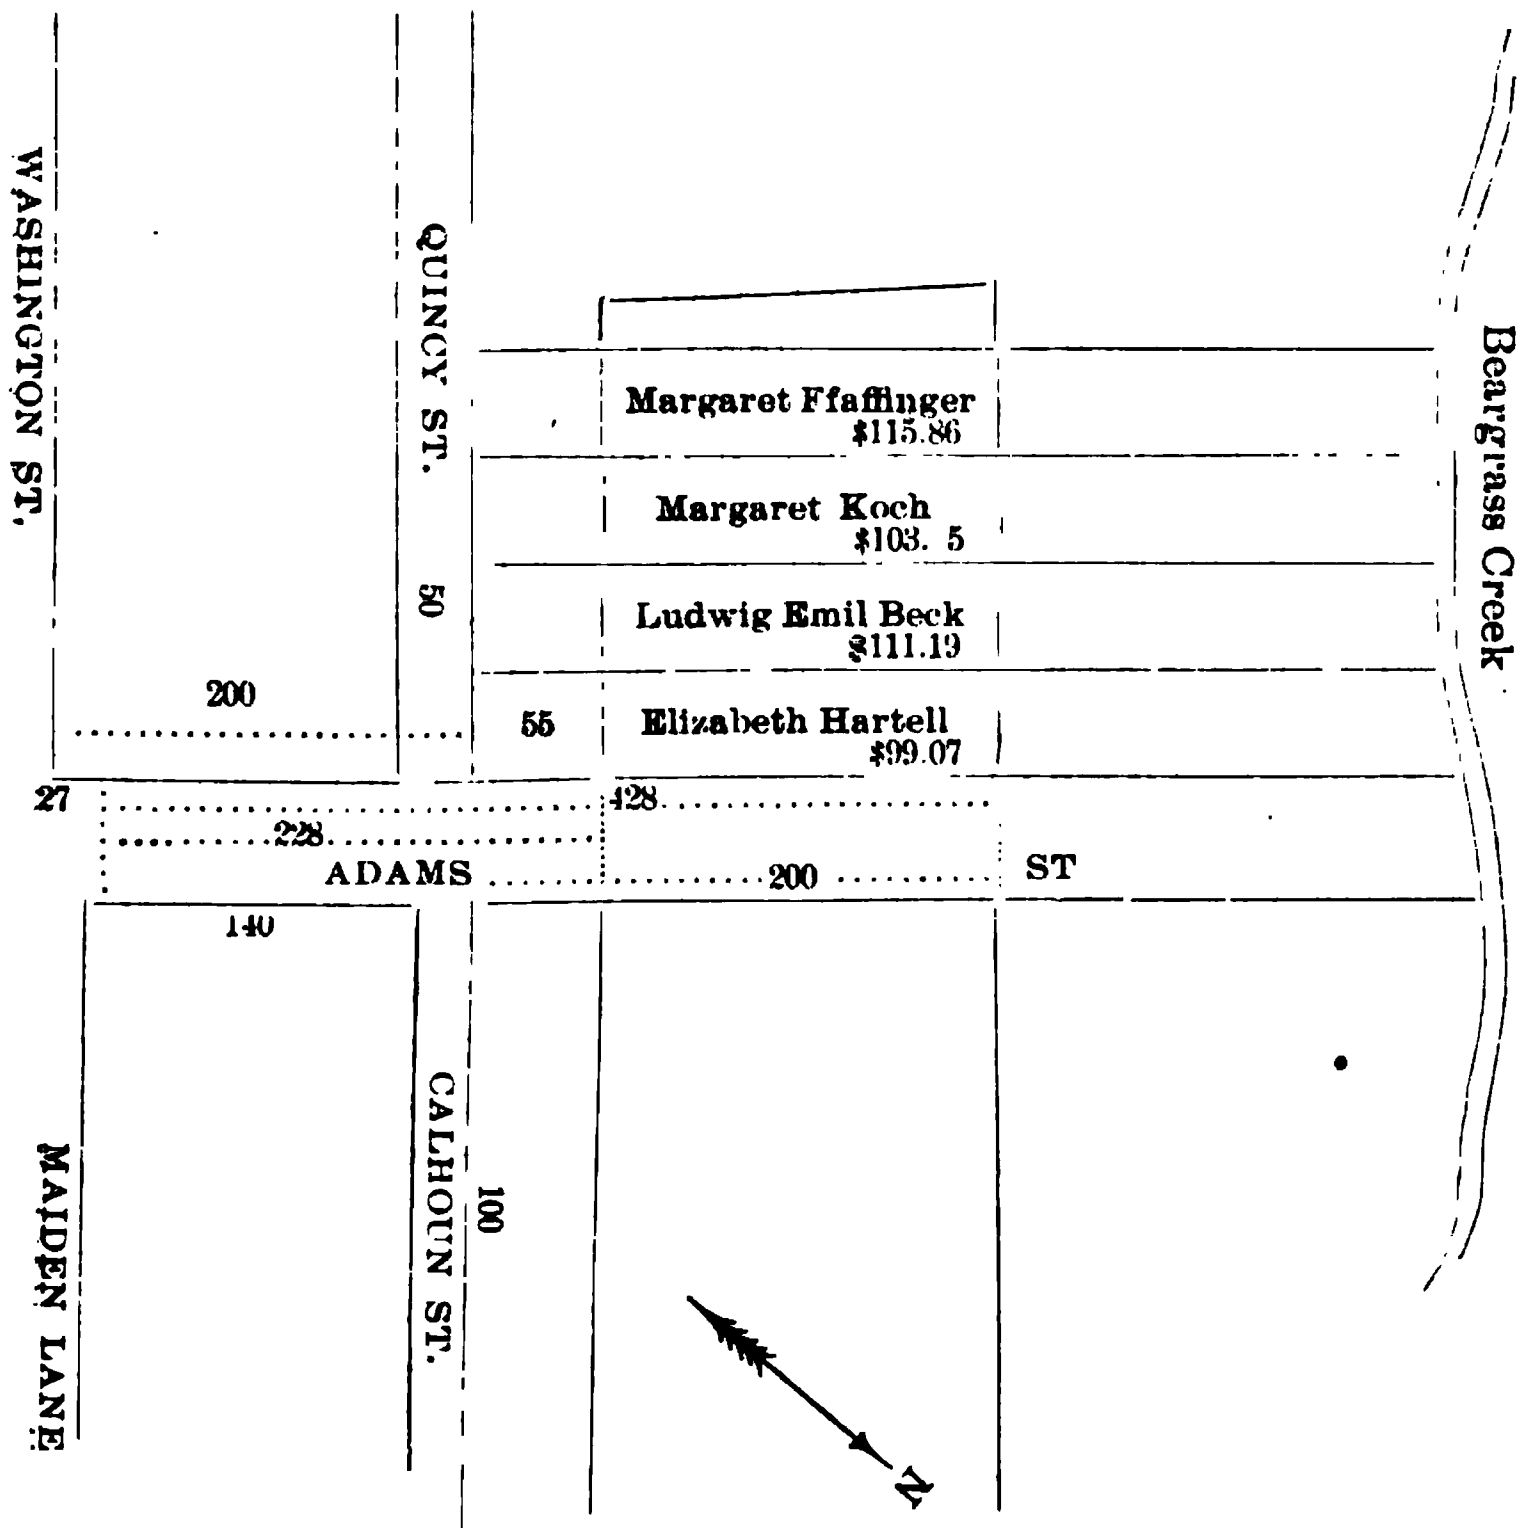

M. S. Tyler and Carroll & Carroll for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

This appeal is prosecuted from a judgment enforcing a lien asserted by appellee, assignee of the contractor, on the lots of land belonging to appellants for the improvement by original construction of a part of Adams street, Louisville, from a line 228 feet northwestwardly of Maiden lane for a distance of 200 feet. The territory contiguous to the improvement sought to be taxed upon each side of Adams street is not defined into squares or principal streets, or bounded by principal streets, and, therefore, the general council in the ordinance providing for the improvement designated the depth upon which the assessment should be laid on each side of the way as improved, to pay the cost thereof. The improvement began some fifty-five feet from Quincy street, the nearest intersecting street. A lot of land owned by Elizabeth Hartell, but which does not extent to the full depth fixed by the general council for the territory bearing the burden of the improvement, lay parallel with the street, but between that lot and the furthestmost line of the improvement area would be included parts of the three lots of appellants. As a matter of fact the territory designated to bear the cost of this improvement extended across the lots of appellants, but did not include the whole of any of their lots. The apportionment warrants issued upon this improvement were more in every instance than the value of any of the lots within the area designated by the ordinance after the improvement was made. The circuit court, however, subjected the whole of the lots to sale, and directed that the apportionment warrants should be paid out of the proceeds in the proportion that the area thereof that was within the improvement district bore to the whole of the lot, surface measure. The following plat will make plain the situation of the lots, and the street improvement sought to be charged thereon :

The appellants are Margaret Pfaffinger, Margaretha Koch and Ludwig E. Beck. The amount of the apportionment warrant assessed against each of their lots is shown in figures on the plat. The proof is uncontradicted that each of these lots is worth not exceeding $100, that is, the portion embraced by area defined by the ordinance, while if the whole is considered, running from Quincy street to Beargrass creek, then the value of each lot is several hundred dollars.

Appellants present three principal grounds upon which a reversal is sought. In the first place they contend that inasmuch as none of their lots fronted upon Adams street, they were not liable to assessment for the improvement of that thoroughfare. But we are of opinion that it is not a question under the statute whether the lot required to bear some part of the street improvement assessment actually fronts or abuts upon the street or the part thereof so improved. Taxes must be uniform as far as may be practicable, but absolute equality is unattainable. The most practical application of the doctrine of uniformity in such cases as this is to provide a certain district, which in fact or in every probability is, or from its situation is conclusively deemed to be, benefited by such improvement, upon every part of which an apportionment tax may be laid ratably and equally. Where the public way to be improved is abutted by property defined into squares by principal streets, or the property to be assessed is bounded by principal streets, then the quarter sections of the square contiguous to the property improved is deemed to be the proper territory to bear the cost of the improvement. Or, if the territory is not laid off into squares or principal streets, then the council must, in the ordinance providing an improvement, select and define the territory contiguous thereto which should bear the cost of that improvement. (Section 2833, Kentucky Statutes.) Therefore, the front foot theory has nothing to do with the question; but it is one of proportion, its part of the cost of the improvement being as the number of square feet in the lot taxed bears to the area of the designated district to which it belongs.

The second proposition is that inasmuch as the apportionment warrant issued against each of appellants is more in every instance than the property owned by any one of them within the apportionment district, therefore, it amounts to spoliation, as defined by this court in numerous decisions. (Broadway v. McAtee, 8 Bush, 519; Preston v. Rudd, 84 Ky., 156; James v. Louisville, 19 Ky. Law Rep., 448; Louisville v. Lou. Rolling Mills, 3 Bush, 416.)

For appellee it is argued that the test is not whether the value of the property within the apportionment district is less than the cost of the improvement apportioned against it, but whether such proportionate cost of improvement is as much or more than the value of the whole lot, of which the part sought to be subjected to the tax is a parcel. We can not agree with this reasoning. The thing taxed is the designated district, and that alone, not its owners, nor is it considered in connection with other property held by the same owners. This must be so, because the true theory underlying this method of taxation is that the territory selected and made to bear the tax is the only one presumably directly benefited thereby. Else, to hold that other territory is also directly and equally benefited, but not taxed at all for that improvement, is to impose a tax upon one man's property for the benefit of another's, of the same kind and class, which is not taxed at all. This would destroy that uniformity and equality which, in theory and practically in fact, run through and support this whole doctrine. Besides, it would otherwise be unjust. For example, in the case at bar, if we assume that the portions of appellants' lots not embraced in the designated area are to be considered in determining whether the tax or cost of improvement imposed is as great or greater than the value of the property made to bear it, then when that part of the public way lying adjacent to these outlying parts come to be improved, they would again be taxed for a similar improvement. So that while in the aggregate the costs of say three improvements corresponding in length with appellants' lots would be more than the value of their lots, yet no one of the improvements would be as much. The result to the owner of the lot would be that his lot has been taken entirely for the improving of the adjacent public way. That is spoliation, if anything is. If the tax imposed is equal to the value of the property taxed after the improvement for which the tax is laid, it is not material to the lot owner whether it is more, or how much more, for he loses interest at the point where the proposed tax consumes the property taxed. In the case of each of the appellants the tax sought to be imposed is greater than the property upon which it is, or can be, laid, and is, therefore, void.

The remaining question is close akin to the one just decided. That is, could the court properly apply any part of appellants' properties outside of the improvement district to the payment of the tax? We do not understand that his honor, the learned judge who tried this case, really meant to hold that they could be. What the judgment undertook to provide was a sale of an indivisible piece of property as a whole, in a proceeding against the owner to enforce a lien against a part of it. The circuit court correctly decided that the whole lot should be sold (provided the tax was a valid one); but the proceeds of the sale should not have been adjudged upon the proportion of superficial areas. If the part of the lot in lien to appellee was one-fourth, say, of the area of his whole lot, but only one-tenth of the value of the whole, this judgment might result in appropriating a part of appellant's lot in lien to the payment of the lien. The effect would be to indirectly make the lot owner personally liable for some part of the tax, which this court has held could not be done, under the statute. (Meyer v. Covington, 103 Ky., 546; Barker v. The Southern Construction Co., 20 Ky. Law Rep., 793; Fehler v. Gosnell, 99 Ky., 330.)

To make other property liable than that taxed is equivalent to a personal liability of the owner, although a personal judgment is not rendered, because it amounts to the same thing as a personal liability, which is nothing unless the person's property may be subjected to its satisfaction.

The judgments are reversed and cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the petition so far as it seeks a recovery against appellants.

---

RUPPLE v. KISSEL, &c.

(Filed May 6, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Married women—Estoppel—Bills and notes—A. held a note on B. for $1,000. B. owned a lot adjoining that of C., who desired to purchase it. By agreement of parties A. surrendered his note to B. and accepted the note of C. and D., her husband, for the same amount, with the understanding that the lot should be conveyed to C., but without any knowledge of A. it was conveyed to her husband, and all parties recognized the note as the debt of the wife. The husband and wife sold the lot to other parties. The wife afterwards paid to A. $600 on the note, and became insane, and the court adjudged that the note was null and void, and adjudged that the $600 was paid by the wife without consideration. Held—That the court erred in permitting the recovery of the $600, as the same was paid on a debt which the wife in honor and good conscience owed, and under the rules of equity should not recover.

W. W. Thum and G. Garner Clark for appellant.

H. H. Cooke and J. W. S. Clements for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson.

In the year 1887 appellant, Phillip Ruppel held a note for $1,000 on Mary Strasser. Miss Strasser owned a lot adjoining the home of her sister, Catherine Kissel, which Mrs. Kissel wished to buy from her for $1,000. Miss Strasser and Mrs. Kissel then made an arrangement with Ruppel, who was a friend of theirs, that he would accept Mrs. Kissel's note and surrender Miss Strasser's, explaining to him that Miss Strasser would convey her property to Mrs. Kissel. He was sick in bed at the time. Mrs. Kissel and her husband executed to him a note for $1,000, and he surrendered Miss Strasser's note to her. Miss Strasser then made a deed to the property to Mr. Kissel, reciting the consideration as paid. Why the deed was made to the husband is not shown, and Ruppel did not know of this. The parties were friends, and there seems to have been the utmost confidence between them. The interest was paid on the note thus given to Ruppel from year to year until 1890, and several renewals were made, each signed by the husband and wife, the husband's name being placed first and the wife making the payments of interest. Kissel and wife ran a bar room and grocery. He stayed in the bar room and she in the grocery. At the time of the novation of the debt Miss Strasser had another offer for the property, and there seems to have been no reason for the change, except the desire of Mrs. Kissel to get the property. Ruppel's only motive appears to have been to accommodate his friends. Mr. Kissel died in the year 1894; there was an insurance of $2,000 on his life, and out of this Mrs. Kissel, in the year 1896, paid to Ruppel $600 on the note. Subsequently she became insane, and was sent to an asylum. Ruppel then brought this suit against her and her committee to recover the balance of the debt. The committee pleaded her coverture in bar of the action; also that the note was without consideration. He made his answer a counter-claim, alleging that the $600 paid by her on the note after her husband's death was paid through ignorance of her legal rights, when she was of feeble mind, and by reason of the fraudulent advantage taken of her. Judgment was prayed for the recovery of this sum by the committee. On final hearing the court dismissed the plaintiff's petition and gave judgment against the plaintiff for the $600 and interest, which Mrs. Kissel had paid upon the note after her husband's death.

The judgment in favor of the defendant on the note was proper, as Mrs. Kissel was a married woman when she executed it, and the note was void. Being void, she could not ratify it by recognizing it as her debt after she became discoverd, or by making a partial payment on it and promising to pay the remainder, no new consideration being given. (Chaney v. Flynn, 2 Ky. Law Rep., 417; Cheves v. Clover, 4 Ky. Law Rep., 360 Miller v. Payne, 7 Ky. Law Rep., 296; Bagby v. Bagby, 10 Ky. Law Rep., 540.)

But a different question is presented as to the $600 paid by Mrs. Kissel on the note after her husband's death. Although she afterwards became insane, the proof is clear that her mind was unaffected at the time of this payment. There is also an utter failure of proof as to any imposition, misrepresentation or fraud of any kind. She paid the money voluntarily because she recognized the debt as her own, and felt under a moral obligation to pay it. It is also true that she thought she was under a legal obligation to pay it, and did not understand that in law she could not be compelled to pay it. It is insisted that her payment having been made under a mistake of law and when she was not legally bound, the money may be recovered. The rule in this State is that where money is paid without consideration under a palpable mistake of law or fact, which was not owing in law or conscience, and ought not in justice to be retained, it may be recovered. (Underwood v. Brockman, 34 Ky., 310; McMurtry v. Kentucky Central R. R. Co., 84 Ky., 464; Louisville Banking Co. v. Asher, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1183, and cases cited.) On the other hand, the rule is that although money was paid under a palpable mistake of law, yet if in conscience and justice it should not be returned, no recovery can be had. Thus in Louisville v. Zanone, 58 Ky., 151, where a property owner had paid an assessment for a street improvement in ignorance that by an error of the council he was not legally liable, it was held that he had received a benefit from the improvement, and that it could not be said that, in honor or good conscience, the money ought to be paid back to him by the city. This principle was also applied in Mitchell v. Stoddard County Bank, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1562; Brands v. City of Louisville, 28 Ky. Law Rep., 442, and cases cited.

In his reply to the counterclaim Rupple, after setting out the facts above stated as to the origin of the note, aptly pleaded that he surrendered the Strasser note and accepted the Kissel note on a distinct agreement that Miss Strasser would convey the property to Mrs. Kissel; that this conveyance was not made by their fault and without his knowledge; that he supposed the agreement had been carried out, and in all transactions had with Mrs. Kissel, and from her statements, he was led to believe the property had been transferred to her, and did not know otherwise until after this suit was brought; that she always acknowledged the debt as hers; that the property has since been transferred to another person, and that she always held herself out to him as the principal in the note, and by her fraud and mistake the property was conveyed to her husband and not to her. We think the proof sustains these allegations, although we are satisfied that Mrs. Kissel and her husband, no less than Rupple, acted in good faith and with entire honesty of purpose. Still the fact remains that Rupple has lost his debt so far as it has not been paid, and that he and Mrs. Kissel throughout the arrangement regarded her as the principal debtor. She made the arrangement with him, and she made also all the payments on the debt. If the property had been conveyed to her, it or its proceeds would have been subject to the debt while in her hands. She suffered it to be conveyed to her husband. Having done this, she recognized the debt as hers, and being under at least a moral obligation to pay it, paid the $600 on it freely and voluntarily. We can not say, under the evidence, that this is money which in honor and good conscience she ought not to have paid, or that he ought not to retain it.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with directions to dismiss the counterclaim.

SHUMAKER'S ADM'R v. LOUISVILLE &amp; NASHVILLE R. R. CO., &amp;c.

(Filed May 6, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Appeals—Final order—The lower court having ordered a fund recovered from a railroad company to be paid into court, pending a proceeding to determine the proper parties to whom payment should be made without any order having been made as to whom the money should be paid, is not a final order from which attorneys and parties in interest can appeal.

Robert Harding and John W. Rawlings for appellants.

Edward W. Hines and C. R. McDowell for appellee, Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co.

McMillan & Talbott for appellee, Jennie S. Hurst.

Appeal from Boyle Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

John Shumaker's personal representative recovered a judgment against the appellee, Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co., for $5,000, and it was affirmed in this court. Before the mandate or execution was issued the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. instituted this action to restrain the issuing of an execution, and sought to have the court take charge of the amount due under the judgment, upon the ground that there was a question as to who was the personal representative of the deceased, and to determine who, if any, of the persons claiming to have, were entitled to liens upon the judgment. Under the averments of the petition there was an issue between the attorneys for the plaintiff as to their respective rights in the judgment; and also an issue with the widow and the guardian of the child of the deceased, besides an issue as to whether the party claiming to be was the personal representative of the deceased. The court accepted the tender of the fund and placed it in the hands of the Boyle National Bank, and there to remain until ordered to be distributed by the court. From that judgment the appellants, Voris claiming to be the personal representative of the estate, Robert Harding and J. W. Rawlings who, as attorneys, represented the plaintiff in the suit in which the judgment for $5,000 was rendered, prosecuted this appeal. From the statement filed with the transcript the following persons were made appellees, namely: Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co.; Jennie S. Hurst, as former administratrix of John Shumaker, deceased; Jennie S. Hurst; Bernie Shumaker, an infant under fourteen years of age; Sylvester Russell, and R. G. Price, as clerk of the Boyle Circuit Court. Motions were entered by Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co., Jennie S. Hurst and Jennie Hurst, as guardian, to dismiss the appeal. On October 30, 1902, the motion was sustained as to the appellee, Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co., and Jennie S. Hurst.

The rights of these appellees last named can not be considered in reviewing the action of the court because they are no longer parties to this appeal. So the question is no longer here as to whether the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. had the right to maintain this action, or whether or not the court erred in ordering the money to be paid to the Boyle National Bank. The court below did not adjudge the rights of parties to the fund. The judgment from which the appeal is prosecuted reserves that question.

Nothing was adjudged in favor of the remaining appellees against the appellants, nor does the judgment affect their rights with respect to each others' claims to any extent whatever. It results that there is no final order from which appellants can prosecute an appeal.

It is, therefore, dismissed.

---

CHILDERS v. LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO.

(Filed May 6, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Railroads—Damage from surface water—Appellant sold the right of way through her land to appellee. The road constructed a cut through the land and sloped its sides so as to gather a large amount of surface water, which it gathered in ditches and discharged on the premises of appellant in such quantities as to greatly injure her spring and other property. This action was instituted to recover damages for such injuries. The lower court gave to the jury a peremptory instruction to find for appellee, from which this appeal is prosecuted. Held—That the court erred in giving said peremptory instruction. The deed from appellant granting the right of way did not confer upon the appellee the right to accumulate water and discharge it in an artificial channel on the remaining part of the land, thus to produce a serious damage. No such damage was in the contemplation of the parties. Appellee is responsible for the construction of the approaches so as to contribute to the injury, but would not be responsible for injuries resulting from a cloudburst or excessive rain on a special occasion, but this was a matter that should have been submitted to the jury.

B. B. Golden for appellant.

J. W. Allcorn and E. W. Hines for appellee.

Appeal from Knox Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The appellant owns land at the end of one of the appellee's tunnels. The appellee, for the consideration of $55, in 1886 purchased the right of way over the land of the appellant, and about that time constructed the tunnel. When the tunnel was first built the approaches to it for some distance next to the premises of the appellant were supported by timbers, and by reason of which a narrower cut was necessary to the approach of the tunnel. In 1896 the timbers decayed, and the appellee removed them and sloped the sides of the cut so that the distance from bottom to the top of the slope is from 150 to 200 feet. Ditches were cut along the track so as to carry away the surface water, which was precipitated upon the track by the sides of the cut. The plaintiff's house is situated just below the track. Previous to the removal of the timbers and sloping of the sides to the cut the surface water was not discharged upon the land of the appellant so as to injure it in any way. Afterwards the surface water was carried upon her premises in such a way as to destroy her spring and render uninhabitable her residence. This action was brought to recover damages for that injury. The court gave peremptory instructions to find for the defendant. The question here is, did the court in doing this err?

The testimony offered in behalf of the plaintiff tends to show that her premises were not injured by surface water until the change in the cut which we have described; that it cut great gullies in her premises; that had practically destroyed her spring; that on one occasion, after a heavy rain, water was thrown upon her premises so as to carry away her shed and smokehouse; that her fences were carried away thereby. The plaintiff testified that the water ran in her spring every time it rained, and that she has been forced to abandon her house by reason of the water that has been cast upon her premises on account of the change in the tunnel and the construction of the ditches. The plaintiff also testified that, in her opinion, some of the water which formerly flowed through the other end of the tunnel now, by reason of the ditches which had been dug, was brought toward her premises and thrown upon them.

It is urged that because the plaintiff had conveyed to the appellee the right of way it had the right to construct the road in the manner in which it was, and if in consequence of that the plaintiff's property was injured, she is not entitled to recover. This contention is answered in Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co. v. Brinton, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 666, wherein the court said: "The deed is one which simply purports to convey the right of way to the appellant. There is nothing in it which gives the appellant the right to make an unlawful use of property conveyed by it. The vendor had the right to rely upon the fact that the railroad would be constructed so as not to damage him by its wrongful act. It did not confer upon the appellant the right to accumulate water and discharge it in an artificial channel on the remaining part of his land, and thus produce a serious damage. No such damage was in the contemplation of the parties at the time the deed was executed, neither does it relinquish a claim for damages for such an act."

In that case the court quoted with approval Gould on Waters, wherein it said: "An owner of land has no right to rid his land of surface water, or superficially percolating water, by collecting it in artificial channels and discharging it through or upon the land of an adjoining proprietor. This is alike the rule of the common and civil law." * * *

It certainly was not in the contemplation of the parties when the right of way was granted that the appellee had the right to construct its road so as to cast surface water upon the grantor's premises so as to practically destroy them. Its reasonable and proper use of the right of way does not allow it to construct their railroad so as to produce the effect which the plaintiff's testimony tended to prove in this case. The court below seemed to be of the opinion that all the damage had been produced by the excessive rain on one occasion, which resulted in the carrying away of the shed and smokehouse, and for that reason the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. If the injury complained of was the result of a cloud burst or excessive rain, and the manner of the construction of the approach to the tunnel did not contribute to the injury of the plaintiff, then of course the appellee has no responsibility for the injury resulting on that particular occasion. This is a question for the jury. Besides, the testimony tended to show that every time it rained the water was discharged upon the plaintiff's premises to her damage. In our opinion the case should have gone to the jury.

The judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

ACTON, &c. v. WALKER'S EX'TX.

(Filed May 6, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Bills and notes—Specific performance of contract—Pleading—This action was instituted by appellee as executrix of W. to recover judgment on four notes of $100 each for purchase money for land; also for judgment for $100 on another instrument purporting to be a mortgage on horses to secure the payment of the first note. Held—That no judgment should be rendered on the last instrument as it is simply a mortgage to secure the payment of a note; at least it is not an obligation to pay any sum of money. The petition is insufficient to authorize a recovery on the four notes, as it fails to aver where the testator died, and in what court she qualified as executrix, and in what court the will was probated. The terms of the title bond are not averred specifically. The plaintiff failed to allege the terms of the will, and that under the will she was vested with the title to the land which had been sold appellants, or state the facts that would show that she had the right to make and tender them a deed which they were bound to accept under the terms of the title bond.

W. H. Barnes and E. P. Neal for appellants.

Appeal from Ohio Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The appellee instituted this action to recover on five several papers, which are as follows:

“One year after date we will pay, with interest, E. Dudley Walker $100, first payment on land. November 29, 1884.

“J. W. ACTON,
“RANDLE ACTON.

“Attest: JOHN P. BARRETT.”

“Two years after date we will pay, with interest, E. Dudley Walker $100, second payment on land. November 29, 1884.

“J. W. ACTON,
“RANDLE ACTON.

“Attest: JOHN P. BARRETT.”

“Three years after date we will pay, with interest, E. Dudley Walker $100, third payment on land. November 29, 1884.

“J. W. ACTON,
“RANDLE ACTON.

“Attest: JOHN P. BARRETT.”

“Four years after date, with interest, we will pay E. Dudley Walker $100, fourth and last payment on land. November 29, 1884.

“J. W. ACTON,
“RANDLE ACTON.

“Attest: JOHN P. BARRETT.”

“We owe E. Dudley Walker a note of $100, with interest, due in one year, first payment on the land, and to secure him mortgage him mine, J. W. Acton's bay mare, about ten years old, and mine, Randle's, one bay horse, about three years old. November 29, 1884.

his “J. W. x ACTON, mark
“RANDLE ACTON.

“Attest: JOHN P. BARRETT.”

The petition is not in paragraphs. It is in substance averred in the petition that the plaintiff's testator, by title bond, conveyed a certain boundary of land to the appellants, and for the purchase money the obligations sued on were executed. The court rendered a personal judgment against the appellants for $500, with 6 per cent. interest per annum from 29th of November, 1884, the date of the notes.

It will be observed that the notes are for $100 each, and in the one due one year after date it is recited that it is the first payment on the land; in the one payable in two years after date it is recited that it is for the second payment on the land; in the one due three years after date it is recited that it is the third payment on the land, and in the one due four years after date it is recited that it is for the fourth and last payment on the land. From the terms of these four several promissory notes the obligors only promised to pay the plaintiff's testator the sum of $400. By the other writing copied above the plaintiff claims the appellants promised to pay an additional $100.

It does not import a promise to pay plaintiff's testator $100. It purports to be a mortgage on J. W. Acton's bay mare and Randle's bay horse to secure the payment of a 100 note payable one year after date executed for the first payment on the land. This paper bore the same date of the notes. We conclude that it is not a promise to pay money, but it is a mortgage of two horses to secure the payment of the note executed for the first payment on the land. But in any event, if it is not a mortgage of property to secure that note, it is certainly no obligation to pay money, but only mortgage of property to secure the payment of money. It, therefore, follows that the court erred in rendering judgment against appellants for $500.

The plaintiff fails to aver where the testator died and in what court she qualified as executrix, and in what court the will was probated. The terms of the title bond are not averred specifically. The plaintiff failed to aver the terms of the will, and that under the will she was vested with the title to the land which had been sold appellants, or state the facts which would show that she had the right to make and tender them a deed which they were bound to accept under the terms of the title bond. Failing to make these averments the petition was defective. The tender of the deed in the absence of the averments as to the terms of the will showing the right of executrix to make it is insufficient. (Cavin & Elliott v. Williams & Ray, 8 Bush, 343.) The demurrer should have been sustained to the petition.

The judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

---

SIMPSON'S GD'N, &c. v. MILLER.

(Filed March 6, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Homestead—Purchase money—Where money is borrowed to pay purchase money on a farm the farm may be subjected to the debt notwithstanding the owner may claim it as a homestead, as such claim can not prevail against a debt created prior to the acquisition of the land and payment of purchase money.

J. S. Glenn for appellants.

J. E. Fogle for appellee.

Appeal from Ohio Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson.

Mary C. Simpson owned a farm of value $300 in Ohio county. She and her husband traded this farm to M. F. Allen for another tract of land worth $600, and arranged with appellee, David Miller, that he would pay Allen $300. Allen then conveyed the latter farm to Mrs. Simpson. The consideration of the conveyance is expressed in the deed in these words: "In consideration of an exchange of land, amount of $300, and $300 cash in hand paid, which is furnished by D. A. Miller, which retains a lien, notes being executed this day, note $150, due 16th of January, 1895, two notes for $150, due 16th of January, 1896, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged."

Mrs. Simpson and her husband executed notes to Miller, payable as above, containing the following recitals: "The above is secured by a lien on our farm and is evidence of money borrowed, being purchase money on said farm." Miller brought this suit on the notes and to enforce the lien on the land. The defendants claimed the land as a homestead, and insist that there was no lien on it to the extent that it was paid for by the $300-tract, on which they resided with their family before the trade. The circuit court enforced the lien, and the defendants appeal. The proof clearly shows that the money was borrowed of Miller to pay the balance of the purchase money of the tract of land conveyed by Allen to Mrs. Simpson, and was paid to Allen. It also shows that there was a distinct understanding that Miller was to have a purchase-money lien on the land for the money. The notes were executed in accordance with this agreement, and the deed which retained the lien on the land for the money was accepted by the grantee and recorded. The proof also shows that the reason for borrowing the money was that there was a lien on the land by mortgage due by Allen, which had to be removed, and this mortgage was paid off out of the money which Miller furnished.

It is insisted for appellant that a married woman can not encumber her land in any other way than that pointed out by the statute, and that the homestead right having vested in the $300 tract, continued in the other tract to the extent that its proceeds went into it. (Rulo v. Murphy, 51 S. W., 312; Carr v. Winlock, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 1047; Blakely v. Adams, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 268.) But none of these cases are in point here. Simpson and wife conveyed away the $300-tract to Allen, and when they come to claim a homestead in the $600-tract they are met by the provision of the statute that the homestead exemption "shall not apply to sales under execution, attachment or judgment, if the debt or liability existed prior to the purchase of the land or of the erection of the improvement thereon." (Kentucky Statutes, section 1702.) Under this provision the exemption does not exist as against purchase money for the land, nor can it be claimed against a note given for borrowed money used to pay the purchase money. (Bradley v. Curtis, 79 Ky., 327; Coleman v. Parrot, 17 Ky. Law Rep., 814.) The money borrowed of Miller was the purchase money of the tract, and Miller has the same lien on the land under the deed that Allen would have had if the notes had been executed to Allen and not to Miller. The deed was accepted. It in terms retained a lien on the land, and as against this lien no right of homestead exists.

After Mrs. Simpson's death the action was revived against her infant children, and the guardian ad litem filed an answer, pleading that there was a mistake in the notes in reciting a lien on all the land. This was denied by the reply, and no proof was taken to sustain the allegation. Besides, there was no allegation of mistake in the deed, which had been accepted, and the money being used to pay for the land and borrowed for this purpose at the time the deed was made, by the terms of the statute the exemption does not apply as against the debt.

Judgment affirmed.

---

LOUISVILLE RY. CO. v. SOUTHWESTERN ALCATRAZ ASPHALT
AND CONSTRUCTION CO., &c.

(Filed May 6, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Street improvements—Appellant owning property at the intersection of Highland avenue and Von Borries avenue, on this appeal complains of the method of assessment of its property to pay for the improvement of Von Borries avenue because property on the opposite side of Von Borries avenue is not assessed to the same extent. Held—That the method of assessment is not objectionable for this reason as the property on the other side of said avenue lies in a triangle formed by Von Borries and Baxter avenues, and has been required to contribute to the improvement of Baxter avenue; besides, the assessment can not be extended across a principal street.

L. R. Yeaman for appellant.

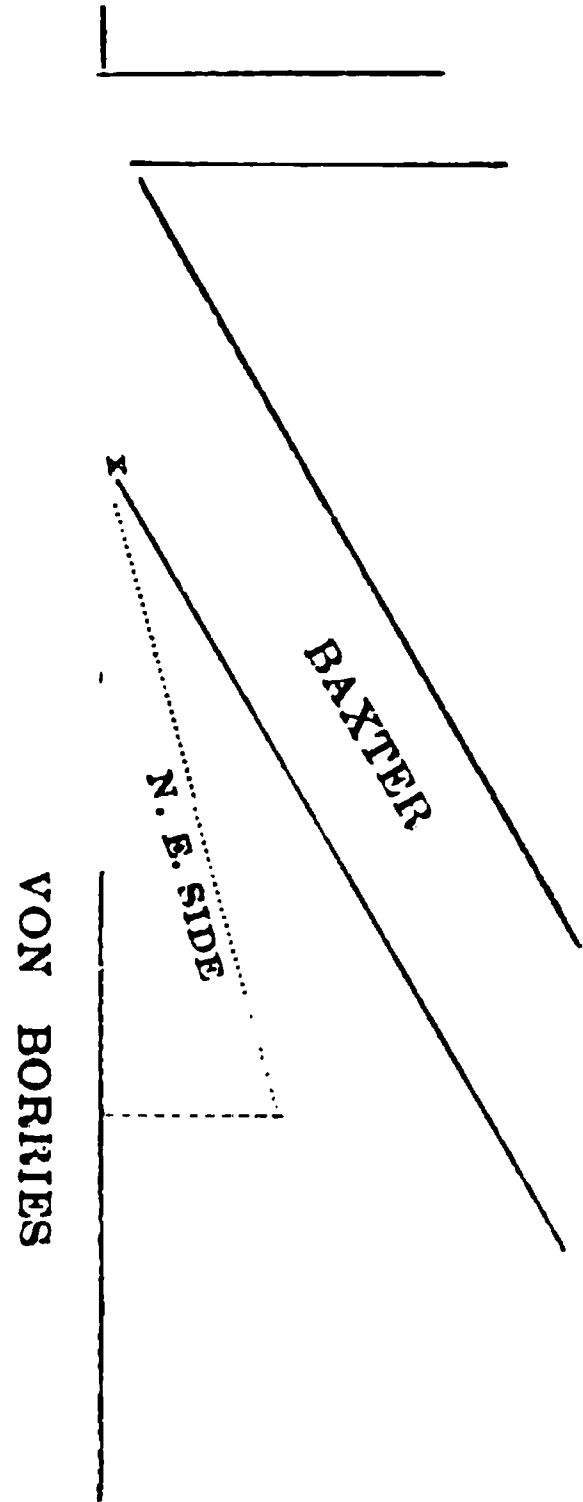

William Furlong for S. W. A. A & C. Co.

H. L. Stone for city of Louisville.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson.

The city of Louisville made a contract with appellee for the improvement of Von Borries avenue, from Highland avenue to Hepburn avenue, and assessed the cost of the improvement to the property owners abutting thereon. Baxter avenue intersects Von Borries avenue at an acute angle, and in this way the amount of property on the northeast side of Von Borries avenue assessed for the improvement is small. This threw a larger burden on the property on the south side than would otherwise have fallen on it, as the cost under the statute is assessed to both sides according to the total number of square feet. The total area assessed is 107,555 square feet. Of this, 11,305 square feet are on the northeast side of the street, and 96,250 on the southwest side. The situation is shown by the following map:

Appellant, the Louisville Ry. Co., who owns the lot at the intersection of Highland avenue and Von Borries avenue, complains of the assessment on the ground that something like 89 per cent. of the cost of the improvement was thrown upon the property on the southwest side of the street. But the property on the northeast side pays at the same rate per square foot, and from the shape of that property we are by no means sure that the burden does not fall as heavy on it as on the property on the opposite side of the street. There was no mistake in not assessing the property north of Baxter avenue for this improvement. This property has been assessed for the improvement of Baxter avenue, and we have held in several cases that the council can not cross a principal street in making an assessment. The property owners north of Baxter avenue having been assessed for improving it, no injustice has been done appellant in the assessment in controversy. (Zender v. Barber Asphalt Co., ante, 2279, decided April 29.)

Judgment affirmed.

---

EARLEY v. SUTTON.

(Filed May 6, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Appeals—Bill of exceptions—Where the record shows that a bill of exceptions was filed and signed at a term of court subsequent to the term at which the motion for a new trial was overruled, without any order appearing which extended the time for filing a bill of exceptions, it will not be considered on appeal.

R. S. Crawford for appellant.

C. W. Lester and S. V. D. Stout for appellee.

Appeal from Whitley Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Burnam.

This action in ejectment was brought by appellee in the Whitley Circuit Court against the appellant to recover a small boundary of land which it was alleged he was wrongfully in the possession of. The defendant, by answer, traversed all the affirmative allegations of the petition, and the jury under proper instructions found for the plaintiff. And the defendant upon this appeal asks a reversal mainly upon the ground that the verdict was flagrantly against the weight of evidence. The trial was had and plaintiff's motion and grounds for a new trial filed at the January term, 1901, of the Whitley Circuit Court; but they were not acted upon at that term, and during the following May term additional grounds for a new trial were filed, and the motion for new trial overruled, and the plaintiff awarded the possession of the land. At the following, August, term of the court the defendant tendered and had signed his bill of exceptions. The record fails to show that time was given to appellant at the term that his motion was overruled to prepare and tender his bill of exceptions at the succeeding term of the court as provided by section 334 of the Civil Code. We, therefore, can not legally consider upon this appeal that part of the record which purports to be a bill of exceptions. (Vandever v. Griffith, 59 Ky., 425; Lynch v. Reynolds, 69 Ky., 457.) But for the satisfaction of counsel we will say that we have read the testimony as therein contained, and, in our opinion, it abundantly supports the finding of the jury. The pleadings in the case also support the judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

---

BOWMAN & COCKRELL v. DILLION.

(Filed May 6, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Contracts—Injunction—A conveyance of the joint use of a river bank for the purpose of tying logs and rafts does not give the purchaser the right to erect a boom along the bank for the purpose of catching logs, and the owner of land on the opposite side of the river may enjoin the operation of the boom when it interferes with his right to float rafts or logs.

Beckner & Jouett and C. C. Williams for appellants.

J. W. Brown and J. W. Alcorn for appellee.

Appeal from Rockcastle Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson.

On July 17, 1865, the Livingston Coal Co. conveyed to Denny, Faulkner & McLean four acres of land lying at the junction of Round Stone creek and Rockcastle river, on the east side of Round Stone and the north side of the river, fronting on the river 26 poles and 19 links. The deed also contained this provision: "The second party is to have the joint use of the bank on both sides of Rockcastle river above the mouth of Round Stone up to where the lines of the first party crosses said river for the purpose of tying logs and rafts to the trees on said bank. This privilege is to be used and enjoyed in connection with and jointly with the mill seat now occupied by Roberts, except that the second party is to have the whole and exclusive use of the banks fronting on Rockcastle river and on the land herein conveyed to them from the water's edge at the junction of Round Stone and Rockcastle river up said river 26 poles and 19 links to the corner of the land of the second party."

The property conveyed by this deed passed through several hands, and is now owned by appellants, Bowman & Cockrell, who operate a sawmill on it. On the opposite side of Round Stone, and just below them on the river, is the mill of appellee, W. R. Dillion, who purchased his property in the year 1898 from Margaret Sambrook, who also claimed under the Livingston Coal Co. by a deed subsequent to that of Denny, Faulkner & McLean. Dillion owned fifty acres of land lying on the river above appellants' mill; also a strip of land 150 feet wide on the south side of the river and adjoining this tract. Appellants put a boom in the river on the south side opposite this 150-foot strip, and appellee filed this suit to enjoin them from maintaining it. Their right to maintain the boom depends upon the meaning of the clause in the deed to Denny, Faulkner & McLean, above quoted. It is shown that the mill seat occupied by Roberts is no longer occupied as a mill seat. It is also shown that owing to the size of Rockcastle river it is difficult to raft logs down it, and that the most practicable way to get them down is to float them down loose on a tide and catch them in a boom. The boom as maintained by appellants was put in by Denny, Faulkner & McLean soon after they got the property, and was maintained by them until they failed, about the year 1890. The boom afterwards broke, but parts of it remained. While it was in this condition Dillion bought it from Mrs. Sambrook in 1893. After this appellants bought the Denny, Faulkner & McLean property and repaired the boom, and have since maintained it. While the proof shows that all the parties have had booms since about the year 1884, it is not shown that there were any booms in the river at the date of the deed from the Livingston Coal Co. to Denny, Faulkner & McLean, or that there had been any before that. On the contrary, we think the proof shows that up to this time the logs were brought down in rafts. On these facts, the question to be determined is, what is the effect of the grant of the joint use of the bank on both sides of Rockcastle river for the purpose of tying logs and rafts to the trees on the bank? It is conceded by appellee that appellants have the right to tie their logs and rafts along the bank in front of his property. He only disputes their right to maintain the boom there. In determining the meaning of these words the rest of the clause must be looked to by the court. The privilege thus conveyed, it is stipulated, is to be used and enjoyed jointly with the mill seat occupied by Roberts, except as to the bank in front of the land conveyed. The tying of logs and rafts to the trees along the bank could be used and enjoyed jointly by two parties; but the privilege of maintaining a boom would not naturally be conferred jointly on two mill owners. And as the practice had been to bring down the logs and rafts and tie them to the trees, the natural meaning of the language of the deed when it conferred a privilege jointly with Roberts of tying logs and rafts to the trees on the bank is that the grantor did not convey the right to maintain a boom, which is a very distinct right and of much greater value than the mere right of using the bank to tie the logs and rafts to. This conclusion is fortified by the difference of language used in reference to the bank in front of the land conveyed to Denny, Faulkner & McLean. As to this it is provided "that the second party is to have the whole and exclusive use of the bank fronting on Rockcastle river and on the land hereby conveyed to them." The whole and exclusive use of the banks is a very different thing from the joint use of the banks for the purpose of tying logs and rafts to the trees on it. We, therefore, conclude that the circuit court properly held that appellants under their deed did not acquire the right to maintain a boom in the river opposite the 159-foot strip. The question is not before the court here as to what may be their rights as to the bank in front of their own land, not unreasonably interfering with the free use of the river by others. The amended answer only elaborated the defense made in the original answer. Considering it as filed, we see no reason under all the evidence for disturbing the judgment. The proof fails to make out the case for the operation of an estoppel.

Judgment affirmed.

---

HOCKENHAMMER, &c. v. LEXINGTON & EASTERN RY. CO.

(Filed May 6, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Railroads—Negligence—Throwing corpse from wagon—Appellant states in his petition that while crossing the track of appellee's road with the corpse of his child, on the way to the burial, a train struck the wagon, throwing the corpse to the ground, and prayed for damages for mental suffering on account thereof. The petition was dismissed on demurrer, from which this appeal is prosecuted. Held—That while a parent has the right of burial of his child, and may maintain an action for any interference therewith, in which he may recover damages for his injured feelings, yet in this case it is only charged that by the negligence of the defendant the corpse was thrown out of the wagon to the ground. It is not alleged that the corpse was mutilated in any way, or any injury done to it or the coffin. There is no reason why the same rule may not be applied to a corpse in a case like this as would be applied if the child were alive and no injury done to it. Appellant's petition stated no cause of action.

W. D. Jackson for appellants.

Arthur Carey and Morton, Darnall & Wilson for appellee.

Appeal from Powell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson.

Appellant complains of the judgment of the circuit court dismissing on demurrer his petition. The original petition is in these words: "The plaintiff, John Hockenhammer, says that the defendant, the Lexington and Eastern Ry. Co., is a corporation created by the legislature of Kentucky, with authority to construct and operate a railroad from Lexington, Ky., eastward through Kentucky; that on the 4th day of September, 1899, the plaintiff, in company with his wife, mother and divers other persons, was bringing to Stanton, Ky., the corpse of his infant child, Virgil, for the purpose of burying it in the graveyard at Stanton; that on said day in crossing defendant's road at the regular county crossing made by defendant for said purpose, in Clay City, Ky., with a wagon containing the corpse of said child, by the willful neglect and gross carelessness of the defendant's servants and agents, said wagon was run over and the corpse therein thrown to the ground out of said wagon by the defendant's servants and agents in running defendant's engine and train of cars, which said servants and agents had been employed by the defendant to run, and which they were running under said employment, from said city of Lexington, Ky., east. Wherefore, the plaintiff asks for judgment against the defendant for the sum of $10,000 damages and cost, and for all relief that he may be entitled to."

The defendant entered a motion for the plaintiff to make his petition more specific as to the injury to the wagon, and thereupon he avowed that he claimed no damages for injury to the wagon. The defendant then filed a general demurrer to the petition, which was sustained, and the plaintiff was given leave to amend. The following amendment was filed: "The plaintiff, by leave of court, amends his petition herein, and now makes all the allegations set out in his original petition a part of this amendment, and now states that by the willful negligence and gross carelessness of defendant's servants and agents said corpse was thrown out of said wagon, in the presence of plaintiff, his wife and divers other persons following the said corpse to its last resting place, causing the plaintiff great distress and anguish of mind, by the defendant's agents and servants in running defendant's engine and train of cars, which said servants and agents had been employed by the defendant to run, and which they were running under said employment, and that by reason of the said wrongful act, gross negligence and carelessness of this defendant and its servants and agents this plaintiff was damaged in the sum of $10,000. Wherefore, he prays judgment for the aforesaid sum, and for all proper relief."

The demurrer was sustained to the petition as amended, and the plaintiff declining to plead further, the action was dismissed.

In 8 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 834, it is said: "While a dead body is not property in the strict sense of the common law, yet the right to bury a corpse and preserve its remains is a legal one which the courts will recognize and protect. And any violation of it will give rise to an action for damages."

The English common law authorities are not applicable in America, for the reason that the ecclesiastical courts in England exercised exclusive jurisdiction as to the burial of the dead, and the common law courts treated such matters as belonging exclusively to the church. But as we have no ecclesiastical courts in this country exercising the jurisdiction conferred on such courts in England, rights in the bodies of the dead must be protected by the civil courts. Thus in Larson v. Chase, 47 Minn., 307, 14 L. R. A., 85, a widow brought an action to recover damages for the wrongful mutilation of the corpse of her deceased husband, and it was held that as she had the legal right to the custody of the body of her husband for the purposes of preservation and burial, she could maintain the action, and that as wherever a legal right is invaded compensation for the injury may be recovered, she was entitled to recover for mental pain and suffering, as these were the proximate and natural consequences of the defendant's wrongful act. In Meagher v. Driscoll, 98 Mass., 281, 96 Am. Dec., 759, the defendant entered upon plaintiff's land and dug up and removed the dead body of his child. It was held that the plaintiff could recover damages therefor, including mental anguish as an element of recovery; but in this case the court rests its opinion upon the idea that the gist of the action was the trespass upon the plaintiff's land. In Bessemer Land Co. v. Jenkins, 111 Ala., 135, 56 Am. St. Rep., 26, the same rule was followed. But in discussing this rule in Larson v. Chase the court said: "It would be a reproach to the law if a plaintiff's right to recover for mental anguish resulting from the mutilation or other disturbance of the remains of the dead should be made to depend upon whether in committing the act the defendant also committed a technical trespass upon plaintiff's premises, while everybody's common sense would tell them that the real and substantial wrong was not the trespass on the land, but the indignity to the dead."

In Renihan v. Wright, 125 Ind., 536, 21 Am. St. Rep., —, the plaintiffs, who were the father and mother of a child, sued an undertaker who had charge of the body and agreed to keep it safely in a vault until they were prepared to bury it, but who had negligently allowed the body to be taken from the vault and in some way lost. It was held that they could recover, and that they were entitled to recover for mental anguish. The decision of this court in L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Hull, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 375, is in line with these cases. In that case it was held that damages for mental anguish might be recovered by a husband against a carrier for negligence in the transportation of the corpse of his deceased wife, following the principle laid down by this court in Chapman v. Western Union Telegraph Co., 90 Ky., 265, and Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Vancleve, 107 Ky., 464.

On the other hand, it was held in Griffith v. The Charlotte, &c., R. R., 23 S. C., 25, that there can be no suit for mutilating a dead body, and in Gatzaw v. Buening, 106 Wis., 1, 49 L. R. A., 475, that exemplary damages might be recovered for depriving the plaintiff of the use of a hearse and stopping it as he was burying the body of his child, but that mental suffering could not be considered, as there was no physical injury. But the South Carolina case was an action by an administrator whose rights were determined by the statute under which he was appointed, and in Wisconsin the rule adopted by this court as to the recovery of damages for mental suffering in the cases above referred to is not followed, and this seems to be the foundation for the difference of result reached.

In Burny v. Children's Hospital, 169 Mass., 57, 38 L. R. A., 413, a father sued a hospital to recover for an autopsy performed upon the dead body of his child, entrusted to it for treatment, without his consent. It was held he could recover, and the case of Meagher v. Driscoll was cited as holding that the jury might take into consideration the injury to the plaintiff's feelings. In Foley v. Phelps, 1 App. Div. (N. Y.), the same conclusion was reached, and speaking of the right to possession of the corpse the court said: "It is the right to what remains when the breath leaves the body, and not merely to such a hacked, hewed and mutilated corpse as some stranger, an offender against the criminal law, may choose to turn over to an afflicted relative."

In Pierce v. Swan Point Cemetery, 10 R. I., 227, 14 Am. Rep., 667, the court said: "There is a duty imposed by the universal feelings of mankind by some one towards the dead, a duty, and we may also say a right, to protect from violation; and a duty on the part of others to abstain from violation. It may, therefore, be considered as a sort of quasi property, and it would be discreditable to any system of law not to provide a remedy in such a case."

We, therefore, conclude that the great weight of authority sustains the rule that there is a legal right in the bodies of the dead, which the courts will recognize and protect by the proper action, as the case may be. It remains to determine whether the plaintiff's petition shows an actionable injury to his legal rights. It will be observed that it is only charged that by the negligence of the defendant the corpse was thrown out of the wagon to the ground. It is not alleged that the corpse was mutilated in any way or any injury done to it or the coffin. If the plaintiffs had been in the wagon themselves and been thrown out, but not hurt, they could not have maintained an action for the mental suffering thereby caused, for no rule is better settled than that mental suffering in cases of this character not connected with physical injury can not be recovered for; and if the child had been alive and had been thrown from the wagon just as the corpse was, but not hurt, no action could have been maintained. (2 Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, section 761, 764.) Both the railroad company and the wagon were rightfully upon the highway. It was not a case of willful trespass, but simply a case of collision between the two vehicles, and must stand as any other collision between vehicles on a highway. We see no reason why the same rule should not be applied to a corpse in a case like this as would be applied if the child were alive and no injury done it. To allow the action to be maintained would be to make an exception to all well settled legal principles not warranted by any precedents we have found.

Judgment affirmed.

GRAINGER &amp; CO. v. PATTERSON, JR.

(Filed May 6, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Liens—Agents—Estoppel—P. made a contract with appellee to remodel a business house according to the plans and specifications prepared by an architect. P. made a subcontract with appellants to furnish the iron work, and on the completion of the work there was owing appellants a balance of $624.29, for which they have asserted in this suit a lien on the property. The defense is made that P., the contractor, with the treasurer of appellant company, were present together in the office of the architect, when the treasurer finally consented that an order for the balance owing by appellee should be drawn in favor of P., the contractor, and that the balance would be settled between the parties afterwards. Held—That the evidence conducing to prove this defense of appellant the decision of the chancellor will not be disturbed, and appellant, by their agent, having consented that the order for the balance of the money should be given to P., ought not in good conscience enforce its collection against appellee again.

Fred Forcht, Jr., and Forcht & Field for appellants.

Pirtle & Trabue for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Burnam.

In August, 1899, the appellee, William Patterson, Jr., contracted with Andrew Peklenk to remodel a business house owned by him on Main street in the city of Louisville in accordance with plans and specifications prepared by Clark & Loomis, architects. Peklenk subcontracted the structural iron work called for in the specification to Grainger & Co., a corporation, at the agreed price of $1,686.85, and during the progress of the work paid to Grainger & Co., $1,062.06, leaving unpaid $624.29. Mr. Charles J. Clark, one of the architects who drew the plans, supervised the erection of the building, and as the work progressed drew orders on Patterson in favor of the contractors in payment for work done. On the 13th day of July, 1900, Grainger & Co. instituted this suit against Patterson and Peklenk, in which they allege that on the 13th day of January, 1900, they had filed and caused to be recorded in the office of the county clerk of Jefferson county a statement of their claim, and taken all necessary steps required by the statute to secure a mechanic's lien on the building, and prayed for a personal judgment against the defendants, and for an enforcement of their lien for the balance due by a sale of the property. The defendant in his answer averred "that on the 8th of January, 1900, after the completion of the work, the plaintiff, by its agent, went with Peklenk to Clark & Loomis, the supervising architects of the building to collect the balance due on the work; that it was ascertained that the defendant, Patterson, owed Peklenk a balance of $758.18 upon the building; and that Clark & Loomis, by and with the consent of plaintiff, drew an order upon the defendant, Patterson, in favor of Peklenk for the full amount thereof; and that the plaintiff's agent and Peklenk went together to see the defendant for the purpose of collecting it, but failed to find him on that day, and for this reason the order was not paid; that plaintiff's agent left this order in the possession of Peklenk, under promise from him that he would collect it and pay to the plaintiff the balance due to them: that on the next day the order was duly presented by Peklenk to the defendant and paid;" and pleads that by reason of these facts the plaintiff is estopped from asserting any further claim against the defendant. The plaintiff, by reply, controverted the facts relied on as an estoppel. The chancellor thereupon transferred the case to the common law branch of the Jefferson Circuit Court for a trial of the issue of fact raised by the pleadings, which was duly had, under instructions which are not objected to, and resulted in a verdict in favor of the defendant. The case was then retransferred to the chancery division of the circuit court, where it was adjudged, in accordance with the finding of the jury, that Grainger & Co. were estopped by the consent of their agent; that the whole of the balance due by defendant should be paid to Peklenk; and that they would look to him for the amount due, and plaintiff has appealed.

The appeal presents for our decision practically only questions of fact. Charles J. Clark, the supervising architect, testified before the jury that Henry H. Martin, the treasurer of Grainger & Co., was present in his office on the 8th of January, 1900, when he drew the order on the defendant in favor of Peklenk; that he told Martin that he would issue two orders, one for the balance that Peklenk owed him, and the other for the balance that Patterson would then owe Peklenk, and that he could collect his own money from Patterson if he so desired; that Martin & Peklenk got into a controversy over the amount of the balance that was due Grainger & Co., and that Martin said to him: "Let Mr. Peklenk have the order for the full amount, and we will settle the balance between us;" that he then drew the order in favor of Peklenk for the full amount of $758; and that Martin and Peklenk left the office together to go to see Patterson to collect the money. Martin and Peklenk both deny that Martin said to Clark that he could draw the order for Peklenk for the full amount, but neither deny that they were present in Clark's office for the purpose of obtaining the order for the balance due upon the work, and that this order was drawn in the presence of both of them, and that they went together to collect it from Patterson for the purpose of dividing it between them. Upon this question of fact both the jury and the trial judge have decided in favor of the defendant, and the rule is well established in this court that the decision of the chancellor will not be disturbed where the evidence is conflicting, and on the whole case the mind is left in doubt as to the truth. Having by their agent consented that Clark, as agent and representative of the defendant, should draw an order in favor of Peklenk for the entire balance due upon the work, appellant can not, in good conscience, ask that Patterson should be required again to pay this money, or any part thereof, to them.

Judgment affirmed.

---

MITCHELL v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Filed May 6, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Contracts—Damages—Appellant entered into a contract by which he was to do certain work in the construction of a tunnel on appellee's road in Indiana, according to the specifications, made a part of the contract. The specifications contain the following provision: The contractor takes all risks in regard to accidents and casualties of all kinds which may occur during the progress of the work, and to be held responsible for all damages to work as well as to the machinery, rolling stock, persons and property which could have been avoided by the exercise of proper care and vigilance on his part. There was also a provision requiring the contractor to execute bond, with approved security, in the sum of $15,000. Appellee, by the operation of one of its trains, injured one of appellant's workmen and compromised his claim for damages by paying him $355.95, and appellant claiming that appellee owed him a balance on the contract brought suit for same, when appellee, as a defense, claimed the right to withhold payment of the amount paid as damages on the compromise. Held—That appellant was not liable for said damage. Such an interpretation should not be given a contract that would make the appellant responsible for the consequence of a negligent act of the appellee unless no other meaning can be ascribed to it. If a doubt existed as to its meaning, the court should resolve that doubt against the contention that the contract was intended to indemnify appellee against its own negligence.

Helm, Bruce & Helm for appellant.

Humphrey, Burnett & Humphrey for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

On the 9th day of April, 1901, the appellant, Mitchell, and the defendant, Southern Ry. Co., entered into a contract by which Mitchell was to do certain work in the construction of a tunnel on the line of the appellee's railway in Indiana, according to the specifications, made a part of the contract. The specifications contained the following provision: "The contractor takes all risks in regard to accidents and casualties of all kinds which may occur during the progress of the work, and to be held responsible for all damages to work as well as to the machinery, rolling stock, persons and property which could have been avoided by the exercise of proper care and vigilance on his part."

Among the provisions of the contract was the following: "The contractor hereby agrees to give bond, same secured by some reliable surety company, accepted by the railway company, in the sum of $15,000, for the faithful performance of the within contract, and for the purpose of indemnifying the railway company for the work contemplated under this contract, and for all cost accruing to said railway company in defending any and all liens, of whatsoever nature, enforced for labor and material under this contract. Said contractor further agrees to indemnify and save harmless said railway company from all casualties or accidents resulting to employes engaged in the work contemplated under this contract, or to any third person who may be in any manner injured or damaged by the said contractor, his servants or agents, in the performance of this contract."

The appellee entered upon and completed the work under the contract, which has been accepted and the contract price has been paid, except, $355.95, which appellee withheld from the appellant on account of the following facts, namely: During the progress of the work on the tunnel Mills Buxton received an injury, which was due entirely to the negligence of the appellee, in the manner of its operation of a railway train through the tunnel, whilst Buxton was working as an employe of plaintiff's in the execution of the work required by the contract. Neither the plaintiff nor any of his employes in the least degree contributed to the injury. The train which inflicted it was not used by the appellant or for him, but was one which was operated entirely by the appellee, and wholly within its control. Buxton instituted a suit against the appellee, to recover damages for the injury he had received. The suit was compromised for $355.95, and it is conceded that the compromise and settlement was a prudent one for the appellee to make.

The question here for our consideration is, did the appellee have the right to withhold the amount which it paid Buxton out of the contract price of the work? The answer to this question depends upon the terms of the contract into which the parties entered. It is the contention of the appellee that the appellant indemnified it against losses occasioned by casualties and accidents resulting in the injury of the appellant's employes engaged in the performance of the work contemplated under the contract, notwithstanding that the injury might be inflicted solely by its own negligence. For the appellant it is insisted that it was not the intention that he should indemnify appellee against its own negligence, but that he was indemnifying against losses which might result to it by reason of his or his employes' conduct in the prosecution of the work. In construing a contract it should be the purpose of a court to ascertain, if possible, the intention of the parties to it. To do so it is sometimes not only important for the court to consider the language employed in the contract, but the circumstances surrounding the parties, and the object in view which induced the making of it. It is not proper in construing a contract for a court to seize upon some expression in it and allow that to control in disregard of other provisions of it. The whole of the contract should be read. When we consider the work to be done by the appellant was to yield him but a few thousand dollars in gross, and that his profits, if large, considering the work to be done, would necessarily be small in amount, it is improbable that he would undertake to indemnify the appellee against losses occasioned by its own acts of negligence. Especially is it so, when one act of negligence by the appellee might not only sweep away the profits derived from the work, but his entire fortune. Such an interpretation should not be given a contract that would make the appellant responsible for the consequence of a negligent act of the appellee unless no other meaning can be ascribed to it. If a doubt existed as to its meaning, the court would resolve that doubt against the contention that the contract was intended to indemnify appellee against its own negligence. Every presumption is against such intention. While the precise question was not under consideration in cases to which we now allude, yet we think the rule enunciated in them applies equally well to this case. In Perkins v. New York Central R. R. Co., 24 N. Y., 206, the court said: "A party who claims exemption from liability for the negligence of his servants or agents must undoubtedly base his claim upon the express words of his contract. It will not be presumed in his favor."

In Mynard, &c. v. Syracuse, &c., R. R. Co., 71 N. Y., 163, the court said: "When general words may operate without including the negligence of the carrier or his servants, it will not be presumed that it was intended to include it. Every presumption is against an intention to contract for immunity for not exercising ordinary diligence in the transaction of any business, and hence the general rule is that contracts will not be so construed unless expressed in unequivocal terms."

To read the contract in question without observing the punctuation, we at once conclude that it was not the intention of the parties that the appellee was to be indemnified against its own acts of negligence. If we read it with a comma after the words "to any third person," then it would read as follows: "Said contractor further agrees to indemnify and save harmless said railway company from all casualties or accidents resulting to employes engaged in the work contemplated under this contract, or to any third person, who may be in any manner injured or damaged by the said contractor, his servants or agents, in the performance of this contract."

To thus read it shows that the indemnity to the appellee is against the consequences of the acts of the contractor, his servants or agents in the performance of the contract. The U. S. Supreme Court in Ewing v. Burnett, 11 Peters, 54, said: "Punctuation is a most fallible standard by which to interpret a writing; it may be resorted to when all other means fail; but the court will first take the instrument by its four corners, in order to ascertain its true meaning; if that is apparent upon judicially inspecting the whole, the punctuation will not be suffered to change it."

When the court takes the instrument by its four corners to ascertain its meaning and reads it without punctuation, the same conclusion is reached, as to the intention of the parties, as is reached when the comma is placed after the words "if any third person." In our opinion, if for no other reason, the comma should be so placed, because the language in the specifications which we have quoted above showed that the appellant was to be responsible only for damages which might have been avoided by the exercise of proper care on his part. By the terms of the specifications (and it must be read in connection with the contract as it is made part of it by express terms) the appellant is made responsible for "accidents and casualties of all kinds which may occur during the progress of the work, and will be held responsible for all damages to the work, as well as to the machinery, rolling stock, persons and property, which could have been avoided by the exercise of proper care and vigilance on his part." The word persons would comprehend all the appellant's agents, servants and employes and "third persons." If he is to be responsible for damages to his employes and third persons, which could have been avoided by the exercise of proper care and vigilance on his part, the converse of the proposition is true; that he is not to be held responsible for damages to his employes or third persons which were not the result of the want of his proper care and vigilance. To read this clause in the specification in connection with the clause in the contract, it is readily seen that the indemnity to appellee against damages to persons by accidents or casualties was such as were produced by the acts of the appellants, his servants or agents. The appellee did not have the right to withhold the amount in controversy.

The judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

CINCINNATI, NEW ORLEANS & TEXAS PACIFIC RY. CO. v.
CASKEY.

(Filed May 6, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Railroads—Damages from fire—Appellee recovered a judgment for $900 damages resulting from fire, caused by sparks escaping from one of appellant's engines. On appeal it is insisted that the verdict is flagrantly against the evidence. Held—That the verdict will not be disturbed. While the doctrine is well settled that if a railroad company uses the latest and most approved means of preventing sparks from escaping from its engines it will not be liable for fires that may result, yet it is competent evidence to prove that large cinders escaped from the engines to rebut the contention of appellant that the fire escapes were in good condition.

C. H. Rodes for appellant.

Robt. Harding and Rawlings & Vories for appellee.

Appeal from Boyle Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

This action was instituted by appellee, J. W. Caskey, in the Boyle Circuit Court, to recover damages against appellant, C., N. O. & T. P. Ry. Co., for negligently setting fire to his house, whereby it and a large portion of his furniture, and other personal effects therein, were burned.

The evidence for appellee showed that his house was situated about one hundred feet from appellant's line of railway, and on the — day of February, 1901, within twenty-five or thirty minutes after the passing of one of appellant's trains, the roof of the house was discovered to be on fire, and those present not being able to extinguish the flames, it was, in a short time, entirely destroyed; that on the day the fire occurred the weather was extremely dry, with a strong wind blowing from the direction of the line of railway towards the house; that as the train passed it was noticed that the smokestack of the engine was emitting dense clouds of smoke, and that cinders were escaping therefrom in such quantity and size that when carried by the wind against the house of appellee it sounded as if it was hailing, and that some of these cinders were as large as peas; that the fire originated at a point on the roof next the line of railroad; that it could not have originated from sparks coming from the chimneys of the house, the strong wind blowing from the direction of the railroad excluding this as a possibility; that the fires in the grates within the house were all down very low, and throwing out no sparks at the time, and there were no other fires in the neighborhood, except that in the engine of appellant's train, from which the conflagration which destroyed appellee's house could have originated.

The answer of appellant put in issue the allegations of negligence contained in the petition, and its evidence conduces to show that the smokestack of the engine in question was furnished with a spark-arrester of the most improved pattern known to science; that it was properly adjusted at the time; that the train was a light one, and not going at an unusual rate of speed. The jury, under the instructions of the court, returned a verdict in favor of appellee for the sum of $900.

Appellant complains on this appeal of no technical error occurring during the trial, but bases its claim to a reversal solely upon the want of merit in appellee's cause of action; in other words, it complains only of the court's refusal to peremptorily instruct the jury to find for it after all the evidence was in.

●

In the case of the L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Samuel's Ex'ors, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 304, it is said: "The law is well settled in this State that a railroad company, authorized by its charter to use steam power, has necessarily the right to use fire as a means of generating steam; and it is not liable for injuries resulting from the sparks escaping from its locomotive if it was furnished at the time with the best and most improved screen and spark-arrester in practical use, when these appliances are in perfect order, if not otherwise guilty of negligence in the operation of its engine. But it is equally well settled that in an action against a railroad company to recover for loss by fire, alleged to have resulted from negligence in operation, or for failure to have the spark-arrester in proper condition, the testimony showing that sparks and cinders escaped from the locomotive in unusual quantities, was competent, and will, of itself, warrant the assumption that the arrester was out of order, or was improperly adjusted, and that the defendant was consequently guilty of negligence in this regard."

This case was approved in Illinois Central Railroad Co. v. Scheible, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 1708, in an opinion which reviewed all of the cases decided by this court on the subject of the negligence of railroad companies in the use and management of spark-arresters, whereby fires were caused to adjacent property. Undoubtedly, the evidence of appellant strongly conduces to show that it was not guilty of the negligence charged by appellee; but, on the other hand, the evidence of appellee was such, in our opinion, as created an issue of fact which was peculiarly within the province of the jury to determine, and as they determined it adversely to appellant we are not able to say that their verdict was flagrantly against the weight of the evidence.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

---

BARRALL v. QUICK.

(Filed May 6, 1908—Not to be reported.)

1. Passways—Condemnation—Evidence—Instructions—In this action by appellee to condemn a passway through the lands of appellant the court did not err in refusing to admit evidence tending to show that the proposed passway was the most practicable and feasible route, as this was not a matter for the consideration of the jury. The finding of the jury that no fencing was necessary was not flagrantly against the evidence. The instructions were not erroneous because they failed to state how much land the passway should contain.

2. Misconduct of attorney—The misconduct of attorney for appellee in his argument to the jury can not be considered on this appeal, as it was not excepted to at the time.

3. Costs—The costs of the trial in the circuit court were properly adjudged against appellant as the finding in that court was less than that in the county court.

Charles Carroll for appellant.

J. F. Combs for appellee.

Appeal from Bullitt Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

This proceeding was instituted in the county court of Bullitt county by the appellee to condemn a private passway over the land of appellant, under the provisions of article 2, chapter 110 of the Kentucky Statutes, entitled "Passways." Commissioners were appointed by the county judge to view the premises for the purpose of ascertaining a practicable and feasible passway over appellant's land to the nearest meetinghouse, mill, warehouse and railroad depot, in pursuance of the prayer of appellee's petition. These commissioners made a report, recommending a route across about fifteen acres of appellant's land.

Exceptions were filed to the report of the commissioners; a trial by jury was had, which being unsatisfactory to appellant, he appealed to the Bullitt Circuit Court, where a trial de novo took place. The verdict and judgment in that trial being adverse to appellant, he appealed to this court, and the case was reversed, in an opinion contained in 23 Ky. Law Rep., 421, to which reference is now had for a more elaborate statement of the facts than is here thought necessary to be set forth.

Upon the return of the case a second trial was had, in which the jury returned the following verdict: "We, of the jury, find it necessary for applicant to have a passway over the defendant's land where the court's commissioners viewed it. Give the defendant $9 for its use. We, of the jury, find it not necessary to have any additional fencing. Assess the damages at $10. Applicant shall erect and keep up all necessary gates."

Upon this verdict the judgment was rendered, establishing the passway as laid off by the commissioners, and adjudging the costs of the proceedings in the circuit court against the appellant, and from that verdict and judgment a second appeal is now prosecuted. The first error complained of is the refusal of the court to admit evidence on behalf of the appellant to establish whether or not the proposed passway was the most practicable and feasible route. We do not think the court erred in excluding this testimony. The questions submitted to the jury were, first, whether or not it was necessary for appellee to have a passway from his residence to the points mentioned in the petition, and, if so, the damage accruing to appellant by reason of the taking of the land and the consequential damage to the balance of the tract through which the proposed passway ran. The question as to whether the proposed route was the most practicable or feasible one was not, under the statute, for the determination of the jury, and the court properly excluded it. Nor do we think the finding of the jury, that no fencing was necessary along the line of the proposed passway, was flagrantly contrary to the evidence. There was much testimony for and against this proposition, and the question was one peculiarly within the province of the jury to determine. The instruction of the court was not defective because it did not state the quantity of land which the proposed passway would take; there was no dispute upon this question, and the jury were thoroughly conversant with the quantity of land which the proposed route would occupy, being a passway twenty feet wide, running through a tract of fifteen acres of land, and amounting in all to seven-eighths of an acre.

We think the instructions of the court fairly presented all of the issues involved in the action between the parties, and were, as a whole, as favorable to appellant as he was entitled to. The misconduct of appellee's counsel in his speech to the jury can not be taken advantage of here, if it had any existence in fact; there was no exception taken to what was said at the time, and the fact that appellant's counsel was called out of the courtroom while appellee's counsel was speaking, leaving an inexperienced young attorney to represent him, and this attorney, by reason of his inexperience, failed to object to the words complained of, can not better appellant's rights with reference thereto. This court can not go into the question as to how far an attorney's experience may justify his failure to properly represent his client's interest.

The verdict rendered by the jury in the county court, and the two verdicts rendered in the circuit court, all show that the land taken in this action is of very small value; there was little or no practical difference between them, and we are constrained to the conclusion that by the verdict complained of appellant obtained all to which he was entitled. There was no error in adjudging the costs accruing in the circuit court against appellant, as the verdict there was less than that in the county court. (Vice v. Eden, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 132.)

Perceiving no error in the record the judgment is affirmed.

---

CLARK, &c. v. YOUNG, &c.

COHOON, &c. v. SAME.

(Filed May 6, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Personal representative—Compensation—Attorney's fees—This appeal involves the correctness of the allowance of $500 to an administrator for extra services; also of an allowance of $1,400 for attorney's fees for services in bringing a suit for settlement of the estate. Held—That the court has inherent power to allow an attorney's fee to a personal representative for legal services rendered for the benefit of the estate, but the court erred in fixing the amount of the attorney's fee without hearing proof and permitting parties to be heard in the matter. The allowance of $500 to the administrator was made after proof was heard, and it will not be disturbed as it seems to be reasonable.

C. T. Baker, W. W. Clippinger and J. G. Hudson for appellant, Chas. Clark.

W. A. Burkamp for appellants, Cohoon, &c.

L. J. Crawford for appellees.

Appeals from Campbell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

William Ringo died testate, domiciled in Campbell county, Kentucky. By his will he devised his estate to certain-named trustees for the use and benefit of his six adopted children. By the eighth clause of the testament in question it is provided as follows: "When the youngest of my aforementioned adopted heirs arrives at the age of twenty-one, my executors shall divide all of my estate, real, personal and mixed, among my said heirs, and my said executors shall convey to each of said children one equal sixth part of all my said estate. Should any of said heirs die before such division can be made, without having living issue at the time of such division, then, in that event, the share of the one so dying shall be equally divided among the survivors of my said heirs. When this division is made each of my adopted heirs shall take his or her share in fee simple. My executors shall not sell any of my improved or productive estate, but they shall preserve the same until the division thereof can be made as hereinafter directed."

Upon the coming of age of the youngest of the devisees, one of them, Charles Clark, instituted an action in equity in the Campbell Circuit Court, alleging that a division of the estate was impossible, and asking for a sale and division of the proceeds according to the terms of the testator's will.

Upon the day following the institution of the action by Clark, W. H. Dyer, who was then the administrator with the will annexed, instituted an action in the same court, setting up the terms of the will and the arrival of the time fixed therein for a division of the testator's estate, alleging that it could be divided among the six devisees, and asking the aid of the chancellor in making this division, and also praying for a reference of the case to the commissioner for the purpose of settling his accounts as trustee. Afterwards the court, upon motion, consolidated these two actions, and they were thereafter treated as one. The court appointed commissioners to divide the estate according to the terms of the will, which was done in a report which was confirmed without objection, and each of the heirs accepted without demurrer the estate assigned to him in the division, and that branch of the case came to an end.

In the settlement of his accounts the commissioner allowed to the administrator, in addition to the statutory commission, the sum of $500 for extra services, which was confirmed by the court. The court also allowed to his attorney the sum of $1,400 as a fee in representing the administrator in this action. Four of the six devisees accepted these allowances as just, and acquiesced in their payment out of the trust estate; two of them, the appellants, William Clark and Maud Cohoon, excepted to the allowances, and have brought the case to this court for a review of the judgment allowing them. William Clark also complains that the court erred in overruling his plea of abatement filed in the action instituted by the administrator, based upon the fact that the action instituted by him preceded that of the administrator, and that the settlement and division should have been made therein.

We think this objection immaterial on this appeal. Both actions were seeking for a division of the estate and a settlement of the trust, and this has been accomplished to the satisfaction of all the heirs, except as to the allowances made for services before mentioned. The right of the trustee to be allowed his costs, including a reasonable fee to his counsel, is not dependent upon the statute of contribution, but grows out of the very nature of the trust itself. The trustee has no beneficial interest in the trust estate, and it would be eminently unjust to require him, out of his own estate, to employ counsel to represent him in litigation concerning his trust, where he acts in good faith, and is chargeable with no wrong or laches; and this allowance, under these circumstances, is due him, whether he occupies the position of plaintiff or defendant in litigation involving the trust.

The case of Thirlwell's Adm'r v. Campbell, 11 Bush, 163, and all of the other cases cited by appellants concerning the allowance to appellee's counsel, involved constructions of the statute of contribution, and are not applicable to the case at bar.

In the Encyclopædia of Pleading and Practice, volume 22, page 211, it is said: "The court has the power to make an allowance to the trustee, or to his counsel, out of the trust funds, for counsel fees properly incurred for the benefit of the trust estate, and as a general rule, where trustees are entitled to costs out of the fund, they are also entitled to allowance for counsel fee."

And in the case of the Matter of Holden, 126 N. Y., 589, it was held that a court of equity has inherent power, independently of the statute, to make allowances to trustees and others acting in a fiduciary capacity, for all expenses, including counsel fees necessarily incurred in the faithful performance of their duties, but it has no power to make such allowances to any other class of parties independent of statutes.

In Perry on Trusts, section 894, the rule is thus stated: "The general rule is that trustees shall have their costs either out of the trust fund or from the cestui que trust, personally. If there is a fund within the control of the court, they may have their costs as between solicitor and client. * * * So if it appears to the court by the pleadings, or otherwise, that they have sustained charges and expenses beyond the costs of suit as between solicitor and client, the court will order such further expense properly incurred to be paid to them."

And again, in section 899, it is said: "The general rule that trustees are to have their costs, applies whether they are plaintiffs or defendants." The same rule is announced in Hill on Trustees, pages 545-6. But while we are clearly of opinion that the counsel of the trustee should have been allowed a reasonable sum for his services out of the trust estate, we are not able to say that the sum of $1,400 is reasonable, in the absence of any evidence on that question.

In the case of Schneider v. Schneider, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1154, it is said: "It is, however, insisted for appellant that the judgment complained of was rendered without any proof being heard, or without any opportunity to appellant to introduce testimony as to what would be a reasonable fee.

"It seems to be well settled that under section 900 of the Kentucky Statutes that courts may, in actions for divorce and alimony, include a reasonable attorney's fee for the wife in the judgment for costs against the husband. The question of a reasonable fee must, like any other question, be determined by the evidence, as to which each party must have opportunity to be heard."

There is no difference in principle between the allowance of a reasonable fee to the attorney for the wife in a divorce case and the allowance to counsel for the trustee in a case like this; both actions are in equity, and the judge has the whole record before him in the one case, as in the other, and he is as capable of determining, from the record, the value of the services rendered by counsel in the one case as in the other; and we think it was error to have made the allowance without evidence as to the value of the services rendered.

We do not think that the court erred in allowing the administrator with the will; annexed $500 for extra services. The case was referred to the commissioner for the purpose of hearing evidence on this subject, and reported that the sum of $500 was reasonable for the extra services performed. There was evidence as to the extra services rendered, and we can not say that the court erred in making the allowance of the sum stated.

The judgment is reversed for the purpose of allowing evidence to be taken as to the value of the services rendered by counsel for the trustee, and for other proceedings consistent with this opinion.

---

DOUGLASS, &c. v. DOUGLASS, &c.

(Filed May 6, 1903—Not to be reported.)

1. Decedents' estates—Claims—Husband and wife between them owned sixty-six acres of land, of which the husband owned thirteen and a half acres and the wife the remainder, and it could not be divided without impairing its value. The farm was occupied by them as a homestead during their lives, and by the wife after the husband's death. After the death of the wife C., one of the heirs, brought this action for a sale of the land and a division of the proceeds among their heirs. He also set up a claim for $76.32 as due him for money paid for a certificate obtained by another at a tax sale, and asked that this amount be paid out of the proceeds. R., a brother, filed an answer, contesting the claim and setting up claim as owner of the thirteen and a half acres of land under a title bond obtained from his father many years before, and alleged that he had been in the possession of same continuously since. R. also set up a claim against his mother's estate, amounting to about $400, for personal services rendered her for about five years before her death. The issues were made up and the suits consolidated and on submission the claim for services was continued until the succeeding term. C. was properly allowed his claim for taxes, and the claim of R., as owner of land purchased from his father, was properly denied, and the property was ordered to be sold as a whole and the proceeds divided.

2. Clerical misprision—The judgment was not a clerical misprision as it was proper to make an order continuing the claim as to personal services as it was not submitted for trial on that issue.

3. Continuance—Appellant was not prejudiced by the refusal of the court to grant him a continuance on the ground of absence of his attorney as he was ably represented by other attorneys.

Wood & Rice for appellants.

H. S. Robinson and W. L. Young for appellees.

Appeal from Taylor Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

C. A. Douglass and his wife, Anne Eliza Douglass, between them owned a tract of sixty-six acres of land in Taylor county, Kentucky, upon which they resided; of this the husband owned thirteen and a half acres, upon which was situated the dwelling house and all of the improvements used in connection with the homestead; the title to the remaining fifty-two and a half acres belonged to the wife.

In 1885 C. A. Douglas died intestate, and his wife continued to occupy the homestead until her death, which took place several years thereafter.

After the death of the mother C. W. Douglass, one of the children and heirs at law of C. A. and Anne Eliza Douglass, instituted an action in the Taylor Circuit Court for the sale of the homestead interest and the division of the proceeds equally among the heirs thereto, of whom there were some ten or twelve in number. The petition sets forth that the land was not susceptible of division without materially impairing its value, and erroneously recites that the whole tract of sixty-six acres was the property of C. A. Douglass; it also contains the allegation that the land had been sold for taxes and purchased at the tax sale by J. R. Davis, who had obtained a certificate of purchase from the tax collector of Taylor county; that in order to redeem the property appellee had purchased whatever rights J. R. Davis had acquired under the tax sale, by an outlay amounting in the aggregate to some $76.32; that appellee made no claim to owning the land in question under the tax sale, but held it for the joint benefit of himself and the other heirs of his deceased parents, only praying that out of the proceeds of sale there should be repaid to him the amount expended in the redemption, with 6 per cent. interest from the time the outlay was made.

In this proceeding all of the heirs at law of C. A. and Anne Eliza Douglass were made parties, and properly brought before the court, the nonresidents having attorney, and the infants having guardians ad litem appointed for them.

R. T. Douglass, a brother of appellant, filed an answer, contesting appellee's claim to be repaid the sum of $76.32 expended in redeeming the land; denying that his father was the owner at his death of the thirteen and a half acres upon which the dwelling house was situated, and setting up a claim to owning it himself, under a title bond executed by his father to him on the 2d day of November, 1869, and alleging that of the purchase price he had paid in work and money $290; he also claimed to have been in the actual, adverse possession of the land in question since the date of his purchase, and pleaded the statute of limitation as giving him a possessory title to it. All these allegations of ownership on the part of R. T. Douglass were properly put in issue by appropriate pleading. Within a short time after the institution of the action by W. C. Douglass, R. T. Douglass instituted an action in the same court, in which he set up the ownership by his mother at her death of the fifty-two and a half acres of land; its indivisibility without materially injuring its value, and sought therein to have it sold for division among her heirs at law; he also set up a claim against her estate for personal services rendered her by him during the five years immediately preceding her death, amounting to the sum of $400, which he asked to be paid him out of the proceeds of the sale of the land.

In this second action all of the heirs at law of Anne Eliza Douglass were properly made parties, and brought before the court by appropriate proceeding. Afterwards these two cases were consolidated, and thereafter proceeded to judgment as one case. By an agreed order the allegations of the petition in the case instituted by R. T. Douglass were controverted of record. It has not been deemed necessary to minutely set forth the particular allegations of the pleadings in this case; it is sufficient to say that they properly presented the issue of the validity of C. W. Douglass' claim, to be paid out of the proceeds of sale, the sum of $76.32, alleged to have been expended by him in redeeming the land involved in this litigation, and the claim of R. T. Douglass to the ownership of the thirteen and a half acres upon which his father resided at the time of his death.

All the evidence having been taken, the case was submitted to the court, and a judgment rendered sustaining C. W. Douglass' claim, for the sum of $76.32 expended in the redemption of the land from the tax sale, and decreeing that the sixty-six acres of land described in the petition be sold, and after refunding to C. W. Douglass the amount awarded to him, the proceeds to be divided among the heirs at law of C. A. and Anne Eliza Douglass, according to their respective rights; and further, that R. T. Douglas had no claim to the thirteen and a half acres to which he set up title except as an heir at law of his father, C. A. Douglass. The issue as to R. T. Douglass' claim against his mother's estate for services rendered to her was reserved, and the hearing thereof continued until the succeeding term of the court, for the purpose of allowing him to take proof on that issue; to all of which R. T. Douglass excepted, and prayed an appeal.

The appellant now contends that the lower court was guilty of a misprision by submitting the case prematurely. This contention is based upon the fact that by oversight the issue was not made up on his claim against his mother's estate until the term of the court at which the final submission of the action was had. There would be merit in this contention if the court had submitted the case on this issue, but the judgment specially reserved it, and continued the case for preparation thereon until the succeeding term. This reservation thoroughly protected appellant's rights in the premises, and he has no just ground for complaint at the court's action in regard thereto. The other issues had been made up more than sixty days before the term in which the submission was had, and there was no reason why the case should have been continued as to them any further. Nor did the court err in refusing to grant a continuance of the case to appellant because of the absence of one of his counsel, S. A. Russell. He seems to have been most ably represented by the counsel who appeared for him in this court, and we do not believe that any interest of his suffered by reason of the absence of the counsel named.

We think the evidence abundantly sustains the judgment of the chancellor in allowing the claim of C. W. Douglass for $76.32. He appears in a very meritorious role in regard to it; he advanced the money for the benefit of his co-heirs in the estate of his father and mother, claiming no rights in the purchase of the tax title to the common property superior to theirs. As we understand it, there is little or no difference between the amount conceded by appellant to have been expended and that claimed by appellee; and even if the chancellor had erred in allowing appellee $10 or $15 too much, as claimed by appellant, his part of the overpayment would be so insignificant as to bring the matter within the maxim de minimis lex non curat.

The chancellor properly adjudged adversely to appellant's claim to the ownership of the thirteen and a half acres of land. The preponderance of the evidence shows that he never had any possession of it, adverse or otherwise, and without discussing the testimony in detail we are satisfied that the decree adverse to his title is amply sustained. We have not discussed the question of competency of the evidence, as we do not think that any substantial right of appellant was injured by the ruling of the court.

The evidence which is complained of is amply sufficient to uphold the finding of the chancellor, and the judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

ALTEMUS, &amp;c. v. NICKELL.

(Filed May 7, 1903.)

Title—Champerty—Warranty—A patentee for a large boundary of land, which includes a smaller tract embraced in an elder patent, who sells same, gives a deed which is champertous as to the elder patent under which adverse possession is held. If the vendor making this champertous deed afterwards acquires title to any part of the land embraced in the elder patent his vendee under the former deed can not recover the after acquired title. His recovery must be based on a warranty, and as the deed was void and champertous, the warranty was void.

W. S. Pryor and D. D. Fields & Son for appellants.

Wm. Low and W. F. Hall for appellee.

Appeal from Letcher Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Wm. H. Nickell was the patentee of a boundary of 34,800 acres of land in Letcher county. The patent was issued after other patents for smaller tracts had been granted by the State, covering in part the same land. To the extent of the laps of the elder and junior grants the latter, by statutory enactment and judicial interpretation, were void, and passed no sort of right to the junior patentee. (General Statutes, chapter 109, section 3, now section 4704, Kentucky Statutes; Hartley v. Hartley, 3 Met., 56; Goosing v. Smith, 91 Ky., 157.)

Wm. H. Nickell attempted to convey to Altemus and Jones the whole of the 34,800 acres without excluding the previously patented land within the boundary. Among the elder grants embraced in Nickell's patent was one then owned by G. W. Caudill, who was then in possession of his land, so the petition says. Thereafter Nickell acquired title from Caudill to the oil, mineral, coal, gas and mineral products, within the Caudill boundary, and took deed therefor. He has sold and conveyed the title so acquired to appellee. This suit is by the vendees of Nickell's first grantees, Altemus and Jones, against his last grantee, appellee, to quiet their title to the oils, gas, minerals, etc., contained within the Caudill tract, upon the theory that Nickell's after-acquired title inured to their benefit as warrantees under his deed.

Conceding the correctness of the general proposition that one who conveys with warranty land to which he has not the title, and afterwards acquires the title, will be held estopped to claim it as against his warrantee, and that it inures by the fact of his conveyance and warranty to his grantee, we come to consider whether the doctrine can be applied in this case. Caudill being in the adverse possession of the tract claimed by him at the time Nickell conveyed to Altemus and Jones, that conveyance, so far as the tract in Caudill's possession was concerned, was in violation of the champerty statute of this State. Section 210, Kentucky Statutes (re-enacting section 2, chapter 11, General Statutes, in force when the conveyance under consideration was made), reads, in part: "All sales or conveyances, including those made under execution, of any lands, or of any pretended right or title to the same, of which any other person at the time of the sale, contract or conveyance, has adverse possession, shall be null and void."

And section 216 (chapter 11, section 8, General Statutes) reads: "Neither party to any contract made in violation of the provisions of this chapter shall have any right of action or suit thereon."

This statute, without material alteration, has been in force in this State since 1824. The same policy had prevailed previous thereto, and indeed had come to us from our mother Commonwealth. This settled policy was one in behalf of the public. Its aim was "to protect bona fide occupants of land against vexatious litigation growing out of champertous contracts, which tend to generate suits that otherwise, in many cases, would never have occurred. So far as the parties to such contracts may alone be concerned it is not a matter of public concern whether the contracts be valid or invalid, legal or illegal. Neither their interests nor their rights were considered by the legislature; the peace of society and the repose of occupants were alone consulted by the statute. (Cardwell v. Sprigg's Heirs, 7 Dana, 38.) Not only are the sale and the conveyance prohibited, and declared to be void, but the further prohibition is added, that neither party to that transaction "shall have any right of action or suit thereon." The vice of the act is guarded against by making it absolutely ineffectual for every and any purpose.

The basis of the doctrine that after-acquired title attaches for the benefit of the vendee of one who has conveyed with warranty, but without title, is the warranty. In very ancient times, before the system of passing title by bargain and sale came into use, it was upon the implied warranty. But running through the treatises on the subject, it will be observed that a warranty must have existed in fact, or be supplied as a fiction, to support the reasoning by which the passing of title by estoppel was maintained. It must have been such warranty as runs with the land, and must have been attached to and have been a part of the deed of conveyance. (Biglow Estoppel, 386, et seq.)

If, then, the deed containing the warranty is void, every part of it must be ineffectual. To allow that the parties to a transaction prohibited as vicious might do, by indirection and circumlocution, that which they could not do directly, would be to bring a reproach upon the administration of the law. In the well-considered case of Graves v. Leathers, 17 Ben. Mon., 665 (opinion by Simpson, J.), it was observed that "under the construction which has uniformly been given to the statute by this court such deeds have been regarded as void, not only so far as the occupant of the land was concerned, but also as between the vendor and vendee."

The deed being void, so far as the land embraced therein, but then in the adverse possession of others, was concerned, its warranting clause was equally nugatory with its granting clause. It was ineffectual to pass title, then or thereafter. Vitality could not be imparted to it by the fraud of one of the parties, more than by his honest intentions. If the grantor was free to ignore his champertous deed, and to repossess himself of the property, even as against his vendee (Crowley v. Vaughn, 11 Bush, 517; Cardwell v. Spriggs, supra), he certainly could acquire from a stranger and hold a perfect title without regard to his own previous void deed.

It follows that the judgment of the circuit court, being in accord with these views, must be affirmed.

PEPPER'S EX'OR, &c. v. PEPPER'S ADM'R, &c.

(Filed May 7, 1908.)

Wills—Description of devised property—The testator, by the first clause of his will, devised to his brother, E., land described as follows: "The home farm on which I now reside, known as the Drenan farm;" also to the same brother all the personal property, after payment of the funeral expenses, and four specific legacies of $100 each. The will further limits the devise to E., the home farm to E. for life, and at his death one-half thereof is to descend to the heirs of the testator. The testator also devises to his brother, G., for life ninety-five acres of land, and at his death to revert to the legitimate living heirs of the testator. E. qualified as executor, and two years thereafter filed a suit for a settlement of the estate and for a construction of the will, claiming that he was entitled to certain described property, and that his brother, J., was entitled to the balance of the estate to the exclusion of the nephews and nieces of the testator. The brother, G., died childless before the institution of the suit, which left E. and J. as the surviving brothers. E. further claimed that under the will he was entitled to the whole of the Drenan tract of 103 acres, and also to the 111 acres added to it after the date of the will; and also that he was entitled to the 100 acres, a part of the old Pepper farm, as part of the home farm described in the will. Pending the preparation of the case E. amended his petition and set up claim to half of all the lands, alleging that he and the testator were partners in the same, and that the title was conveyed to the testator in violation of his trust. The court adjudged that E. took under the will the whole of the Drenan farm, and the 111 acres adjoining it for life, and at his death one-half thereof; also the 100 acre-tract and the ninety-five acre tract reverted to the heirs of the testator. On appeal, Held—That the court erred in allowing E. to hold the tract of 111 acres as the intention of the testator was clearly expressed in limiting the rights of E. to the Drenan farm, and it is evident that he did not intend to give him a life interest in the 111 acres which was purchased after the making of the will. Held—That the court properly adjudged from the testimony that no partnership existed between the testator and E. in the ownership of the lands. Under the will E. was entitled to a life interest in the whole of the Drenan tract, and to a fee-simple title in one-half thereof; also to the whole of testator's personal property after paying the special bequests; and having paid out of said estate a debt owing by the testator as surety, he is entitled to whatever may be realized on said claim from the principal. He should not be credited in his settlement with the part of the taxes paid on his individual property for the years 1898, 1899, 1900, 1901. The balance should be credited on account of rents. The balance of the estate belongs to all the heirs of the testator.

J. P. McCartney, W. G. Dearing and J. D. Wyatt for appellants.

J. H. Power, G. A. Cassidy and B. S. Grannis for appellees.

Appeal from Fleming Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

On the 19th day of October, 1882, W. B. Pepper made and executed his will. In the month of February, 1897, he died. His will was probated in that month in Fleming county, the place of residence of decedent. The will, so far as applicable to this case, is as follows:

"1st. I will and bequeath to my brother, Enoch S. Pepper, the home farm on which I now reside, known as the Drenan farm; also I will and bequeath to the said Enoch S. Pepper all the stock that I may own at my decease, together with all crops, all farming implements, household and kitchen furniture and all the purtinances belonging to said farm; also I bequeath to the same brother (Enoch S. Pepper) all moneys, together with all the notes that I have at my decease, after the expenses of my funeral is paid and after my just and honest debts are paid, should there be any, and after the said Enoch S. Pepper shall have paid to my four nephews the following amounts:

"1st. I bequeath to Wesley Pepper, son of Joseph Pepper, $100.

"2d. A. Wesley Clark, son of Thomas Clark, $100.

"3d. Wesley B. Allen, son of John E. Allen, $100.

"4th. Wesley B. McRoberts, son of Asa McRoberts, $100.

"These amounts are to be paid to my four namesakes, of whom I have mentioned above, by E. S. Pepper, out of the amount I have willed to him, he, the said Enoch S. Pepper is to have and to hold all the property that I have bequeathed to him (except the amounts above mentioned) except the home farm, which he shall hold his natural lifetime and at his death one-half of the home farm shall go to my legitimate heirs, should there be any living at his decease, the other half of said farm, together with all the personalties that I have bequeathed to him, be at his disposal to will to whom he may see fit. To my brother, George F. B. Pepper, I will and bequeath the use of the ninety five acres of land that I bought of him (the said George F. B. Pepper), a few years ago; that he is to have the use and all the proceeds of said ninety-five acres of land his lifetime, and at his death I want the ninety-five acres to revert back to my legitimate then living heirs." * * *

Enoch S. Pepper qualified as the executor of the estate, and on the 12th day of August, 1899, filed a petition in the Fleming Circuit Court against the heirs of the decedent, W. B. Pepper, for a settlement of the estate, and for a construction of the will, the executor, Enoch S. Pepper, claiming that under the will, and by a proper construction thereof, he was entitled to certain lands and personal estate, which will be hereinafter referred to, and that his brother, Joseph Pepper, was entitled to the balance of the estate.

The decedent, W. B. Pepper, was a widower and childless. His father and mother had died long prior to his death, and when he departed this life he left surviving him three brothers, to wit: Enoch S. Pepper, Joseph S. Pepper and George F. B. Pepper. He also left surviving him, in addition to the above-named brothers, three children of his deceased sister, Elytian Clark, and also three children of his deceased sister, Nancy Eumstatt, who are appellees herein.

When decedent made and published his will, and also at the time of his death, he lived on what is designated in his will as the "Drenan farm," and his brothers, Enoch S. and George F. B. Pepper, who were bachelors, lived with him.

When W. B. Pepper made and executed his will, in the year 1882, he was then the owner of three tracts of land, one of which was the Drenan farm, on which he lived until his death, as already stated, containing 103 acres; another tract of 100 acres, known as part of the old Pepper farm, and another tract containing ninety-five acres, adjoining the last-named tract. After making the will, and before his death, he purchased and received deeds of conveyance for three other small tracts of land adjoining the Drenan farm, and containing in the aggregate about 111 acres.

When Enoch S. Pepper instituted this action George F. B. Pepper had died, and he instituted it in his individual capacity and as executor, and he construed the will to mean that the whole estate passed to his brother, Joseph S. Pepper, and himself, excluding the appellees, the children of his sisters, from participating in the distribution of the estate, claiming that the language in the will, "legitimate heirs," and "my legitimate then living heirs," sustained him in such construction. He further claimed that under the will he was entitled to the whole of the Drenan tract of land of 108 acres, and also to the 111 acres of land added to it after the date of the will, and also by the use of the words in the will "except the home farm which he shall hold," etc., he claimed the 100 acres of land known as part of the old Pepper farm.

After the parties joined issues, and had taken much proof, and in the year 1901, Enoch S. Pepper filed an amended petition, claiming that he and his brother, W. B. Pepper, had formed a partnership in the year 1867, and that they as partners owned the Drenan farm, and the three parcels so added to it, and afterwards, and during the same year, he filed another amended petition, in which he alleged that the partnership was formed in the year 1865, and that he and his deceased brother owned all the lands before referred to as partners, and that his deceased brother took the deed to all the lands in his own name and held same in trust. These amended petitions were controverted by answer. The depositions of a number of witnesses were taken, some of them for the purpose of helping to construe the will, appellants claiming that the terms thereof were ambiguous, and that by reason thereof such testimony was permissible. The court below excluded this testimony, and adjudged that Enoch S. Pepper took under the will the whole of the Drenan farm, and the 111 acres adjoining it, for life, and at his death one-half thereof was to revert to the heirs of W. B. Pepper, and that the 100-acre tract, and the ninety-five acre tract passed to the heirs at law of the decedent.

Appellants have appealed from this judgment, and appellees are here on a cross appeal from that part of the judgment giving Enoch S. Pepper the 111 acres of land adjoining the Drenan farm. Appellants contend that there is an ambiguity in the will as to the meaning of the words "home farm," and that these words do not refer to the Drenan farm, the home of the testator, but were intended to mean the 100 acre tract, part of the old Pepper place, and took several depositions to prove their contention. We can not agree with appellant in this matter. While the will is inartistically drawn, it is clear that the words referred to mean the Drenan farm, the home of the testator. The first provision of the will contains these words: "I will and bequeath to my brother, Enoch S. Pepper, the home farm in which I now reside, known as the Drenan farm."

The proof shows that the testator resided on the Drenan farm from the year 1867 until his death. It was his home farm, and in the language referred to he expressly says the Drenan farm is his home farm. But appellants contend that further along in the will the testator by the use of these words: "Enoch S. Pepper is to have and to hold all the property that I have bequeathed to him, * * * except the home farm shall go to my legitimate heirs, should there be any at my decease, the other one-half of said farm, together with all the personalty that I have bequeathed to him, be at his disposal, to will to whom he may see fit," evidently referred to the old Pepper place of 100 acres when he used the words "home farm."

This can not be, for the language just quoted does not pretend to devise or bequeath any land or property, but is used as an exception or limitation of what he had previously in his will bequeathed to his brother, and it is certain that no bequest of land to his brother, Enoch S., can be found in the will, except the "home farm, known as the Drenan farm." "Enoch S. Pepper is to have * * * all the property that I have bequeathed to him except the home farm," etc. What land had he bequeathed to him except the Drenan farm, and why did the testator refer to it again? It was evidently for the reason that by the first clause he had given his brother the title to the whole Drenan tract, and he desires to limit the fee to one-half and the other half to a life estate. There is no escape from this conclusion. The language is plain, and not ambiguous.

This court is of opinion that language used by the testator, to wit, "my legitimate heirs," and "my legitimate then living heirs," were used in their literal sense and meaning, and applied to all the heirs of the testator at his death, and at the death of his devisees, Geo. F. B. Pepper and Enoch S. Pepper. There is not a word or sentence in the will indicating that it was the intention of the testator to limit it to his brothers.

This court, in the case of Williamson v. Williamson, 18 Ben Mon., 377, in discussing a similar question, said: "It is clearly incumbent on those who contend that the language of the testator is not to be understood according to its natural and literal meaning, to exhibit some solid and satisfactory reasons, drawn from the subject-matter of the devise, or its purpose and objects, the context, or from other provisions of the will, showing that the words employed in this clause are not to be understood in their clear, plain and literal signification."

There is not a word in the will which indicates that the testator meant by the words "heirs" or "legitimate heirs" to exclude any of his kindred or legal heirs after the life estate of Enoch S. Pepper and Geo. F. B. Pepper terminated.

The appellant took the deposition of several witnesses showing a partnership of some kind between testator and Enoch S. Pepper; statements of testator "that Enoch had as much interest and rights there as he had;" that he, Enoch, owned half of everything there, etc. But it is not shown by any witness or by any pleading or exhibit when the partnership was formed, to what extent or length of time it existed, what capital, if any, either of them had put into the partnership, what they or either of them had drawn out of the firm, if anything, or any proof showing that Enoch S. Pepper ever had any capital to invest in the partnership; nor was there any attempt to show or explain by the proof or any pleading why Enoch S. Pepper suffered and permitted W. B. Pepper to take the conveyance of each and every piece of land in his own name, and so hold it until his death, without any reference, in any deed or writing, showing, or even intimating, that he held the property in trust or otherwise than the fee-simple title in himself. And when we consider the further facts that Enoch S. Pepper lived with his brother, the testator, when the will was made in 1882, and from that time until the death of W. B. Pepper in 1897, and both knowing that the Drenan farm was by the will given to Enoch S. Pepper; that in the will not a word nor an intimation exists indicating a partnership or any joint ownership of property, real or personal, but, on the contrary, referring to the property as his without any exceptions and reservations, and the further important fact that Enoch S. Pepper accepted the provisions of the will and became the executor in 1897, and continued as such until the year 1899, when he instituted this action, asking the court to construe the will, and when the pleadings were filed, and proof taken, and indications were that the court would not agree as to appellant's construction of the will; that in 1901 Enoch S. Pepper filed an amended petition, claiming half of the Drenan tract of land, and the adjoining 111 acres by reason of a partnership existing between himself and testator since 1867, and afterwards filed another amended petition, changing the date of the formation of the partnership from 1867 to 1865, apparently for the purpose of antedating the deeds to W. B. Pepper for the 100 acres old Pepper farm, and the ninety-five acre tract, and claimed that he owned half of them under this alleged partnership. In view of these facts we are of opinion that the circuit court was right in decreeing against appellant's claim of partnership.

We are of the opinion that the lower court erred to appellees' prejudice in construing the will, in this: That Enoch S. Pepper took under the will the Drenan farm and the 111 acres added to it, and purchased after the date of the will. We recognize the fact that a will should be construed to speak and take effect at the death of the testator unless a contrary intention shall appear by the will, and that, if possible, a will shall be so construed as to give to every word and clause some reasonable meaning.

The clause in controversy is as follows: "I will and bequeath to my brother, Enoch S. Pepper, the home farm on which I now reside, known as the Drenan farm; also I will and bequeath to the said Enoch S. Pepper all the stock that I may own at my decease."

Does this clause of the testator's will speak from his death, or "does a contrary intention appear?" As to the real estate devised, by the express terms it refers to the date of its execution, and as to the personal estate, by direct statement, it refers to the time of testator's decease, for in the one case he devised the "home farm upon which I now reside, known as the Drenan farm," and in the very next line he gives the same brother "all the stock that I may have at my decease."

It is conceded that at the date of the will testator's home farm, the Drenan farm, contained 103 acres, and evidently he intended to, and did, will to his brother this particular piece of property.

In Jarman on Wills, 332, it is said: "Another question is whether the enactment which makes the will speak from the death has the effect of carrying forward to that period words pointing at the present time. For instance, supposing the testator to bequeath 'all the messuage in which I now reside,' and that after making his will he changed his residence to another home belonging to him, which he continues to occupy until his death, does the act make the word 'now' apply to the home occupied by the testator at his death? It is conceived that the principle will not be carried such a length, and that this would be considered as a case in which 'a contrary intention appears by the will,' for the reference is to a specific thing then in existence, and the words 'in which I now reside' are the only distinguishing terms of description."

It is not contended by appellants that any of the lands bought after the date of the will were ever the property or Drenan, or a part of the original tract, or were ever known as Drenan lands, but their contention simply is that as accretions to it, and under the statutory rule of construction referred to, the lands passed under the term "home farm on which I now reside." But to so hold the court must entirely disregard the last descriptive clause, "known as the Drenan farm," and regard it as surplusage, and without any meaning at all. Suppose the testator had been more exact in his description when he wrote his will, and had said: "I will and bequeath to my brother, Enoch S. Pepper, the home farm upon which I now reside, and bounded as follows," and had then proceeded to give the metes and bounds of the 163 acre Drenan tract, would any one contend that future acquisitions would pass under this devise, or that Enoch S. Pepper could hold under the will any land outside of the boundary given? We think not. Yet the descriptive words of the testator are as clear and strong as though he had given the metes and bounds. He knew when he wrote the will, and up to his death, what comprised the Drenan farm, and he described it in such manner as clearly to define his intention, which this court can not disregard.

It appears from the will that the testator devised to Enoch S. Pepper the real estate referred to, and all of his personal estate out of which his debts and funeral expenses, and four special devises of $100 each were to be paid, and it appears from the record that testator's estate was bound as security on a debt to one Slack for appellee, Thomas Clark, and that Enoch S. Pepper paid this judgment. The court is of opinion that whatever may be realized on this claim should be returned to the estate of Enoch S. Pepper, for it was paid out of property willed to him.

On the settlement of accounts of Enoch S. Pepper, as executor, his estate should not be credited with that part of the taxes paid on his individual property for the years 1898-1899-1900-1901; the balance should be credited on appellants' account of rents, and not deducted from the personal estate willed to Enoch S. Pepper.

For the reasons indicated the judgment of the lower court is affirmed on the original appeal and reversed on the cross appeal and remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

The Kentucky Law Reporter

---

VOL. 24.

JUNE 15, 1903.

No. 24

---

[Reported by Wm. Cromwell, Esq., of the Frankfort, Ky., Bar.]

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

---

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. v. KIMBROUGH, BY, &c.

(Filed May 7, 1903.)

1. Railroads—Negligence—Jurisdiction—Infants—Guardians—Instructions—Appellee is an infant about thirteen years of age, apparently a waif, having neither father nor mother living who are known. He was riding on the steps of a Pullman car in Logan county, and was either thrown from them by some one on the train or fell from them and was injured, for which he brought this action for damages by a guardian appointed by the Logan County Court after the injury. It is insisted that the Logan County Court had no jurisdiction to appoint his guardian. Held—That there is no proof showing whether appellee is legitimate or illegitimate, or to show the residence of his mother if illegitimate. Under these circumstances the law will fix his residence in Logan county, and the county court of that county had the right to appoint his guardian under section 2015, Kentucky Statutes. On the trial appellant testified that a big fat man wearing a uniform pushed him from the step with his foot. After the employes on the train were introduced appellee failed to identify the man who pushed him off the steps. A verdict and judgment for $1,550 damages for defendant resulted, from which this appeal is prosecuted. It is urged that the court improperly instructed the jury, and that the verdict is contrary to the evidence. Held—That it is doubtful whether the evidence sustains the verdict, but the court erred in giving an instruction which authorized the jury to find for the defendant if the news agent who was on the train on that occasion was neither in the service nor under the control of defendant; and if the jury shall believe that appellee was pushed or ejected from the train by the news agent, they must find for defendant unless they shall believe from the evidence that said news agent was one of defendant's employes in charge of and operating said train. Said instruction was misleading as there was no evidence to show that the news agent had anything to do with the operation of the train.

2. Pleading—The petition alleges that either the servants of the Pullman company or the servants of appellant pushed and kicked appellee from the moving train. Appellant answered without offering any objection to the petition, or moving that plaintiff elect against which defendant he would prosecute the action. Appellant raises this objection the first time on appeal. Held—That by answering defendant waived the objection to the petition for misjoinder of actions.

W. F. Browder, J. C. Browder and E. W. Hines for appellant.

E. B. Drake for appellee.

Appeal from Logan Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Appellee, aged about thirteen years, while stealing a ride on one of appellant's passenger trains, in Logan county, fell, or was pushed, from the steps of the rapidly moving car on which he was riding, and was severely injured. He had been a resident of Clarksville, Tenn., but had abandoned his home there (if it can be said that he had a home there) with the intention of making his home in this State. He was a waif, abandoned by his mother when he was about six months old, and his father is unknown. Whether his mother was living, or if living, where, was not shown. In his suit to recover damages from the railroad company, brought by his statutory guardian appointed by the Logan County (Ky.) Court after his injury, the first question presented was upon the jurisdiction of the Logan County Court to appoint the guardian, for the right of the guardian as such to maintain this action is denied.

Domicil is correctly defined as being either one of origin, of choice, or by operation of law. Every person must be assigned to one of these. So that the place of the residence of the father of a legitimate child, or if illegitimate, of its mother, at its birth, is its domicil of origin. As an infant is incapable of changing its domicil by choice (Munday v. Baldwin, 79 Ky., 121), it follows that wherever may be the domicil of its father, if it is legitimate, or otherwise, of its mother, controls. But where the child has neither legal father nor living mother, and where neither is shown to have maintained a domicil at any place, then it must follow that the child's domicil must be fixed by operation of law. If the mother's domicil was shown, the child's would be accordingly settled. But here is a waif, knowing nothing of its parents, and of whom nothing can be shown, stranded in a community within this Commonwealth. It probably has a certain right to property. Society is interested alike from motives of humanity and of policy in preserving to such one that which will likely save him from being a charge upon the public. The authorities of this State under its laws have taken charge of the person of this derelict, and committed him to the almshouse. They have fixed him a domicil, for the very good reason, in this case, that he appeared to have none other, and it was necessary that he have one, therefore, the law will make him one. The fiction of the law that his mother's domicil if living, or, if dead, her last domicile was his, should yield to the more practical fact that, being found a wanderer and an outcast, the law will take charge of him for his good and for that of the State; it will fix his status in the social state as affects his rights, the right of control of his person and the charge of his property. The State has "adopted" him, as it were; has fixed his residence, his place of abode. It is meet that it should, having thus taken charge of his person, whether with or without his consent; also provide officials to take charge of and represent his property interests.

Our statute (section 2015, Statutes) Kentucky provides: "The court of the county in which the minor resides at the time of the appointment shall have jurisdiction to appoint his guardian."

We are of the opinion that the county court of Logan county, prima facie, had jurisdiction to appoint the guardian suing in this case.

The boy was riding on the rear steps of the Pullman car attached to appellant's northbound passenger train. The petition alleged that either the servants of the Pullman company or the servants of appellant pushed and kicked appellee from the moving train. It is now urged by appellant that the petition was defective in that it failed to state a cause of action against either of the defendants; that our Code provision (section 113, subsection 4), allowing charges in the alternative, did not extend to charging alternative defendants with a single wrongful act. (L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Ft. Wayne Electric Co., 21 Ky. Law Rep., 1544.)

Without motion to compel appellee to elect which of the defendants he would prosecute, and without demurrer, appellant tendered an issue in the case. This objection is raised here for the first time. We hold that the defect, if it was a defect, was waived by failure to object before answering. (Sections 85-86, Civil Code.)

The verdict of the jury found for appellee $1,550 in damages. Appellant relies upon these grounds for reversal, in addition to those already discussed, viz., that the verdict is against the evidence, and error in instructions to the jury.

Appellee was the only witness who testified as to the manner of his having been injured. In his testimony he stated that between Guthrie and Russellville, about 9 o'clock at night, as he was sitting on the steps of the rear platform of the rear car of the train (which was the Pullman car), a person dressed in a uniform, having a blue coat and brass buttons, and a cap with writing on it, came out of the door, saw him and asked him what he was doing there. This person did not offer to molest appellee, but returned into the car and closed the door. Through fear appellee crept further down onto the bottom step, or the one next to it, and was crouching there, with his legs hanging down so that his feet struck the ties, when the person above described returned with another person, also wearing a uniform, including cap. The latter was described as being "a big fat man," who, appellee claims, placed his foot against him, without a word, and shoved, or kicked, him off the car. The train was traveling at thirty-five or forty miles an hour. Every person connected with the operation of that train, except the fireman and baggage-man, were introduced by appellant as witnesses. All of them, except one, testified that they had never seen appellee, and knew nothing of his presence on the train, or of his injury till afterwards. Appellee, on being re-examined after these witnesses, testified that none of them was the person who shoved or kicked him off the train.

Sharp, flagman on the train, testified that he went upon the rear platform to re-adjust a marker, a red light carried there, when he discovered appellee; that he was then hanging onto the hand bar and lower step of the car; that the side door of the vestibule was closed; that he asked appellee if he could climb up onto the steps, and appellee told him he could not; that he pulled the signal cord to the locomotive, giving the emergency signal to stop, and went forward to inform the conductor of the situation; that the boy was so placed that the witness could not, with safety to his own life, at the speed the train was going, have taken hold of him and lifted him onto the car; that when he returned directly the boy was gone, and that the train ran about one mile and a quarter before stopping after the boy was first discovered by him.

The negligence complained of and sued for was not in failing to stop the train and rescue appellee from the peril of falling from an insecure, dangerous position, nor for failure to aid him in regaining his foothold on the steps, for he says (and he is the only witness who testified on that point) that but for the push or kick of the fat man in uniform he would not have fallen. This was the sole ground of negligence relied upon in the petition. Therefore, his whole case, as the pleadings now stand, depends on connecting this fat man with appellant as one in authority on that train, assisting in its operation, as one of appellant's servants. Whether baggagemen on trains and firemen wear uniforms such as described by appellee is not shown by the record. Whether it is a fact of such common knowledge that the courts should take notice of it is not at all certain. Such uniforms are not confined in their use by any means to trainmen. The only other person on that train who is shown to have then worn a uniform was the newsboy. He was not introduced as a witness. There was no evidence tending to show that the newsboy had any connection whatever, as a servant, with appellant, and of course, therefore, none that he had any authority whatever in the operation or management of the train. In the way the issue was formed it is doubtful if the verdict was sustained by the evidence.

The instructions are not subject to proper criticism, except the one given marked "O," as follows: "The court instructs the jury that 'if the news agent, who was on defendant's train on the occasion in controversy, was neither in the service nor under the control of the defendant, and even if the jury shall believe from the evidence that plaintiff was pushed or ejected from the train by said news agent, they must find for the defendant unless they shall believe from the evidence that said news agent was one of defendant's employees in charge of and operating said train.'"

As there was not a scintilla of proof that the news agent had any connection whatever with the operation of the train, or even that he was an employe of appellant, the instruction was misleading, and it was error to submit that question to the jury upon the state of the record.

For the reasons indicated the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to award appellant a new trial under proceedings not inconsistent herewith.

---

COLUMBIA FINANCE & TRUST CO. v. BATES.

(Filed May 7, 1903—Not to be reported.)

1. Judicial sales—Inadequacy of price and surprise—Joint tenants—Appellant and appellee were joint owners of Tar Springs and each was anxious to become the sole owner, but they were unable to fix a price, and it was agreed to have a suit to sell it. At the sale the property, which was worth about $4,000, was sold by the commissioner to appellee for $1,000. Appellant, in its exceptions to the sale, allege gross inadequacy of price; also misapprehension by an agent of appellant of conversation with attorney for appellee, which induced appellant not to have a representative at the sale to protect its interests. Said exceptions were overruled and the sale confirmed, from which this appeal is prosecuted. Held—That while this court will not set aside a judicial sale on account of mere inadequacy of price, yet when property worth about $4,000 is sold for $1,000 under circumstances showing surprise or unfairness as existed in this case, the chancellor should set aside the sale and require the bid to be started at the advanced price that party is willing to give.

2. Appraisement—No appraisement was necessary in this case as the sale was not for debt.

Helm, Bruce & Helm for appellant.

W. W. & J. R. Walls for appellee.

Appeal from Breckinridge Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

Appellant and appellee being joint owners of the property known as the Tar Springs and tract of land upon which the same is situated, and unable to agree with each other as to the price upon their respective interests, instituted this action in the circuit court of Breckinridge county, where the property lies, to obtain a decree for its sale. The decree was duly rendered as prayed by the parties, and the property sold by the court's commissioner, appellee becoming the purchaser at his bid of $1,000.

The sale was duly reported by the commissioner, and at the same term of the court exceptions thereto were filed by appellant, accompanied by a written offer and guaranty to start the bidding at $2,500, if the court would order another sale of the property, and that it would take it at that sum if no higher bid should be made. The exceptions were overruled, and an order entered confirming the sale and directing the commissioner to execute a deed to appellee as purchaser. Appellant complains of the confirmation of the sale by the lower court, and has brought the case to this court by appeal. The objections to the confirmation of the sale presented by the exceptions are: That because of a misapprehension on the part of appellant, its officers and agents, as to the time of the sale, as to who was to attend it as appellant's representative, and as to the necessity for the presence at the sale of such representative, the property was sold at about one-third or one-fourth of its real value; and further, that there was no appraisement of the property before it was sold.

Numerous affidavits were introduced by the parties upon the trial of the exceptions, and while in some respects the evidence furnished by them was conflicting, taken as a whole it tends to establish the following facts, that it was the purpose of appellant's president and chief attorney to have a representative or agent of appellant at the sale to see that the property should sell for its true value; that one Ridgley Cayce was the person selected and instructed by appellant's president to attend and represent it at the sale, and that Cayce was prevented from being present at the sale because of a conversation which he had a short time before the sale with Hustin Quin, an attorney, holding a position in the office of appellant's chief attorney, in which he understood Quin to advise him, as the representative of the chief attorney, that it would not be necessary for him to attend the sale, or represent appellant at that time. It can not be doubted that the sum bid for the property by appellee was grossly inadequate, for it appears from the record that the property was and is worth not less than $4,000, and while mere inadequacy of price will not of itself authorize the setting aside of a decretal sale if the attendant circumstances of the sale are such as to indicate that there has been a sacrifice of the property, resulting from some surprise to or misapprehension on the part of one interested in the property, but for which he would have attended the sale and prevented the sacrifice by making the property bring its true value, it becomes the duty of the chancellor to order a resale. As said by this court in Stump v. Mortin, &c., 72 Ky., 289, "there must be either fraud or misconduct in some one connected with the sale, some surprise or misapprehension on the part of those interested, or of the officer who conducts the sale, or some irregularity in the proceedings, or other circumstances attending, conducing to show unfairness, before the chancellor will refuse to confirm this act of the commissioner." * * *

In Morris v. McCadden, &c., 23 Ky. Law Rep., 539, it appears that exceptions were sustained and the sale set aside by the lower court upon the ground that the price was grossly inadequate, and that the sale took place at the time and in the immediate vicinity of a heated political meeting. In affirming the judgment of the chancellor this court said: "This court has often held that on account of the public interest in having purchasers at judicial sales secure in their purchases, it would not sanction the setting aside of such sales for mere inadequacy of price; on the other hand it has frequently held that where the attendant circumstances of the sale were such as to show that it was not a fair one, the added circumstances of inadequacy of price would be considered." In Bean v. Hoffendorfer Bros., 84 Ky., 693, it is said: "Mere inadequacy of price, as has been frequently held by this court, is not alone sufficient to set aside a judicial sale, but when the price bid is greatly disproportionate to the actual value of the property only slight additional circumstances are required to justify and make it the duty of the chancellor to set it aside." * * *

It is unnecessary to discuss the contention of appellant that the sale was invalid because of failure to appraise the property. There was no right of redemption, consequently no appraisement was necessary as the sale was not for debt. Although the guaranty of appellant that it will bid $2,500 on the property in controversy if a resale is ordered is one hundred and fifty per cent. above what it was purchased at by appellee, such guaranty will not authorize a resale.

The courts of this State have never approved or adopted the rule of practice that has so long obtained in the chancery courts of England, to open the biddings and order a resale upon offer of an advance of 10 per cent. by the applicant and payment to the purchaser of his costs by reason of his bidding, but as, in our opinion, the sale made in this case should be set aside because of gross inadequacy of price, together with the surprise and misapprehension on the part of appellant, its officers and agents, whereby the sacrifice of the property resulted. Appellant should be required to make good its guaranty by starting the bidding at $2,500, and taking the property at that price if no better and higher bid is offered.

For the reasons indicated the judgment of the lower court confirming the sale and ordering the commissioner to convey the land to appellee is reversed and remanded, with directions to set aside the sale heretofore made, at appellant's cost, and order a resale in conformity with this opinion.

---

MORAN v. VICROY.

(Filed May 7, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Damages—Evidence—Instructions—This was an action brought by appellant against appellee to recover damages for malicious shooting and wounding. A verdict and judgment resulted in favor of appellee, and appellant has prosecuted this appeal, urging that the court erred in admitting threats of appellant against appellee, running back several years; also erred in refusing an instruction offered by him. Held—That there was no error in admitting the evidence of threats as the rule is settled that upon the issue of self-defense, where there is evidence conducing to show that the plaintiff was the aggressor and made the first hostile demonstration against the defendant, evidence of previous threats and hostile demonstrations by him against defendant is always competent as tending to show that defendant was in peril at the time he shot, and that the plaintiff began the difficulty and his motive. The instruction offered by appellant and refused by the court, that the defendant could only shoot if he had no apparently safe means of escape from said impending danger, was properly refused. The instructions given properly presented the law of the case and the verdict will not be disturbed.

J. L. Chamberlain, W. D. Cochran and E. L. Worthington for appellant.

Wesley Vicroy for appellee.

Appeal from Mason Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Burnam.

The appellant, Moran, brought this action against the appellee, Vicroy, for having maliciously shot and wounded him. The appellee admitted the shooting and wounding of appellant, but claimed that he did so in self-defense. The proof conduces to show that Moran and Vicroy owned adjacent farms; that Vicroy's servants were digging a gutter along the margin of the Maysville and Bracken Turnpike road in front of a gate leading into his premises for the purpose of putting in a culvert; that Moran, who lived nearby, went to the point where the culvert was in process of construction with a shot gun and warned Vicroy's servants not to extend the gutter below a certain point, upon the ground that it would interfere with his entrance. About this time Vicroy came out of his barn, about thirty-five feet away, and warned Moran to go away and let his hands alone; that Moran immediately stepped across the gutter in the direction of Vicroy, raised and cocked his gun, and that Vicroy immediately fired the shot complained of.

It is also in evidence that on the preceding day Moran had threatened to inflict personal violence upon Vicroy if he attempted to extend the gutter beyond the point indicated, and said to him that if he got out of his buggy that he would give him a thrashing at that time.

Upon the trial the court admitted proof of numerous threats made by appellant against appellee, running back for several years prior to the day of the shooting. The trial resulted in a verdict for the defendant. Appellant complains upon this appeal that the court erred to his prejudice in admitting proof of prior threats, and also in refusing to give an instruction offered by him, which told the jury "that they should find for plaintiff unless they believed from the evidence that when Vicroy shot he believed, and had reasonable grounds to believe, that he was in danger, and that he had no other apparently safe means of escape from said impending danger."

Upon the issue of self-defense, where there is evidence conducing to show that the plaintiff was the aggressor and made the first hostile demonstration against the defendant, evidence of previous threats and hostile demonstrations by him against the defendant is always competent as tending to show that defendant was in peril at the time he shot, and that the plaintiff began the difficulty and his motive. (Wharton's Criminal Evidence, section 757; Robertson's Kentucky Criminal Law and Procedure, section 223.) The instruction offered by appellant and refused by the court, that the defendant could only shoot if he had no apparently safe means of escape from said impending danger, has been frequently condemned by this court. By the third instruction the jury were told that "if they believed from the evidence that at the time Vicroy shot and wounded plaintiff he then believed, and had reasonable grounds to believe, that he was then in danger of loss of life or great bodily harm at the hands of Moran, then he had the right to use such force as was necessary, or as to him under all the circumstances seemed reasonably necessary, to protect himself from injury at the hands of Moran, and no more."

This instruction seems to fairly state the law.

Judgment affirmed.

---

ALTEMUS, &c. v. ASHER, &c.

(Filed May 7, 1908—Not to be reported:)

1. Title—Pleading—In this action to quiet title to land, where the claim to land and growing timber is based on a deed which was made by their vendor before he acquired any title thereto, and they claim that the subsequent acquisition of title by their vendor enured to their benefit, Held—That this is true only where the claimant's deed contains a warranty of title, and in this action the petition failing to allege that the plaintiff's deed contained a covenant of warranty, the presumption will be indulged against the pleader and the petition adjudged insufficient.

2. Pleading—An exhibit filed with the petition can not help out an omission in the pleading to state a material fact.

W. S. Pryor and D. D. Fields & Son for appellants.

Wm. Low and W. F. Hall for appellees.

Appeal from Letcher Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

One W. H. Nickell, claiming to own as patentee a large boundary of about 4,800 acres of land, in Letcher county, sold and conveyed it by deed to J. B.

Altemus and Wm. D. Jones. Within the boundary so embraced in his conveyance were a number of tracts owned by others, whose titles were admittedly superior to Nickell's, because held under elder grants. Some years after Nickell's conveyance to Altemus & Jones he and one J. D. Cooley bought the standing timber on a number of the tracts, to which Nickell had not the title when he sold to Altemus & Jones.

Deeds were made to Nickell & Cooley conveying to them this standing timber. They have since sold and conveyed the trees to appellees. It is the contention of appellants in this suit to quiet their title to one-half of the timber named, and to obtain an injunction against its removal, that the after acquired title of Nickell, his one-half interest in the Nickell & Cooley purchase of timber, inured to the benefit of appellants, grantees of Nickell's first vendees. The circuit court sustained a demurrer to the petition.

It was not stated in the petition whether the conveyance to Altemus & Jones was by deed with warranty or not. We must, therefore, in construing the pleading against the pleader, assume that it did not. If one sells, and by deed conveys, land to which he had not the title, places his vendee in possession, and thereafter acquires the title, the after-acquired title inures to his grantee in the first named deed, provided that deed contained a covenant of warranty, general or special; or a covenant of seizin of title; but not otherwise. (Hermann on Estoppel, pages 787-789, sections 653-655.)

An exhibit filed with and referred to in a pleading will not be looked to to help out an omission in the pleading to state a fact material to the cause of action asserted. (Green v. Page, on rehearing, 80 Ky., 370; Huffaker v. National Bank of Monticello, 12 Bush, 291; Gebhard v. Garmier, 12 Bush, 325.)

In view of this conclusion we do not deem it necessary to notice the other questions argued.

Judgment affirmed.

---

COTTRELL v. COTTRELL.

(Filed May 7, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Divorce and alimony—Appellee instituted this suit for divorce from his wife on the ground of abandonment. In defense the wife asked for a divorce "a mensa et thoro" and alimony and attorneys' fees. The lower court granted the husband's prayer for divorce, refused to allow the wife alimony, and allowed her attorneys a fee of $25, from which she prosecutes this appeal. Held—That this court will review the action of the lower court in granting or refusing a divorce for the purpose of determining questions concerning alimony and allowances. The court properly granted the divorce on the application of the husband and refused alimony to the wife as she was in fault. The court will not disturb the allowance of attorneys' fee, although same was made without hearing proof. This objection can not be raised the first time on appeal.

Montgomery & Lee for appellant.

J. F. Askew and Victor F. Bradley for appellee.

Appeal from Scott Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

This action for divorce was instituted by the appellee against the appellant in the Scott Circuit Court upon the ground of abandonment. In the answer filed by her his right to a divorce was resisted by a traverse of the averments of the petition, and in addition she therein sought a divorce a mensa et thoro, claimed alimony of appellee, and to that end made her answer a counterclaim. Upon submission of the cause the chancellor rendered judgment granting appellee an absolute divorce, and refusing appellant alimony, but allowed her a fee of $25 for her attorneys, to be taxed as cost and paid by appellee. From so much of the judgment as refused her alimony and limited the fee of her attorneys to $25 she prayed an appeal, and the case is now before this court for review and adjudication.

We can not disturb the judgment of divorce, but may consider the entire record in determining whether or not the lower court erred in refusing appellant alimony, and in restricting the attorneys' fee to the sum named. From our examination of the record we are unable to disagree with the chancellor in the matter of granting the divorce sought by appellee, and as it could have been granted only upon the ground that appellant was the party in fault, of which there is sufficient proof in the record, it would seem to follow that her claim to alimony was properly disallowed. This court has time and again allowed the wife alimony in cases where the husband had sued for and been granted a divorce, but in all such cases it was shown that the wife was without fault notwithstanding the judgment of divorce in favor of the husband. This court has also decided that the wife is entitled to alimony, though the husband be granted a divorce, where it was obtained upon the ground that the parties had lived separate and apart without cohabitation for five consecutive years, for upon that ground the wife could also have obtained a divorce. But we are unable to recall any case in which this court has decided that the wife was entitled to alimony notwithstanding a judgment of divorce in favor of the husband, if it was satisfactorily shown that he was entitled to the divorce by reason of the fault of the wife. An examination of the following cases, which constitute but a small part of the number decided by this court in recent years, will, we think, sustain the views herein expressed, and serve in some sort to illustrate the many-sidedness of the law of divorce and alimony. (Newman v. Newman, 95 Ky., 383; Irwin v. Irwin, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 1763; Powell v. Powell, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 193; Parsons v. Parsons, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 223; Alderson v. Alderson, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 595; Turner v. Turner, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 370; Gooding v. Gooding, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 955; Lacy v. Lacy, 95 Ky., 110.)

The record in this case shows that appellant some years ago brought suit against appellee for divorce, which she withdrew upon his paying the costs and conveying to her a small tract of land; they then became reconciled and lived together until her abandonment of him more than a year before the institution by him of this action. She has and yet owns the land he conveyed to her, so notwithstanding the refusal of the lower court to allow her alimony in this case, she is not altogether penniless. Upon the other hand, he is shown to be nearing old age, has organic disease of the heart, and is by reason thereof and his great weight, and feebleness of health and body, wholly unfitted for labor of any kind. It is true that he owns something over 20 acres of land, but it is shown by the proof to be poor land, and worth not exceeding $10 or $12 per acre; his personal estate is also of but little value, and, besides, four of the eight children born of the first marriage are infants, and dependent upon him for education and support.

The only other question to be considered is as to the refusal of the lower court to allow the additional attorneys' fee claimed by appellant and her counsel.

Section 900, Kentucky Statutes, provides that in a suit for alimony and divorce the husband is liable for a reasonable fee to the counsel of the wife as part of the costs where the wife is not in fault and has no estate. The court in construing this statute held that it is proper to allow the wife's attorney a reasonable fee in the character of cases named therein, but we are unaware that it has been decided that such allowance is proper where the wife is shown, as in this case, to be in fault and possessed of an estate of her own. (Whitney v. Whitney, 70 Ky., 520; Williams v. Moore, 18 B. Mon., 518; Ballard v. Coperton, 2 Met., 412.) It would seem, therefore, that appellant is not entitled to an attorney fee in this case, yet $25 was allowed by the court to which no objection seems to have been made by appellee. It is, however, contended that the lower court erred in fixing the attorneys' fee without proof as to the value of the services rendered by them.

In Schnider v. Schnider, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1154, it is said by this court that it is not proper for such an allowance to be made without the hearing of evidence as to the reasonableness of the fee claimed.

We apprehend that it is not the meaning of the opinion in that case that such an allowance if made without proof is void. In this case the depositions furnish no proof of the value of the attorneys' services, nor does it appear from the record that appellant or her attorneys offered, or requested to be permitted, to introduce such proof, either before or after the submission of the case, though it is shown that before the submission they entered of record a motion for the allowance. We think it was their duty to offer proof, but failing to do so, upon the submission the chancellor had the right, without suggestion to the contrary, to assume that the matter of the attorneys' fee was expected to be determined from the record alone. By their failure to offer, or introduce, proof as to the amount of their fee, we think, in all fairness, that the appellant and her counsel are estopped to make complaint for the first time, and in this court, that the fee was allowed by the chancellor without proof other than was furnished by the record.

Being unable to find in the record any error prejudicial to the rights of appellant or her counsel, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

---

HENNING v. LOUISVILLE RY. CO.

(Filed May 7, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Street railways—Negligence—Appellant brought this action to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been sustained by the negligence of the motorman in starting the car before she had an opportunity to alight from it. A verdict and judgment resulted in favor of defendant, from which this appeal is prosecuted on the ground of error in not defining degree of care required to be exercised by appellee for the protection of its passengers. Held—That the court properly told the jury that it was the duty of defendant to have exercised the highest degree of care which a prudent man would, under like circumstances, have exercised to afford appellant a reasonable opportunity to alight in safety. This was better than to have given an abstract instruction on the duty of defendant.

Bennett H. Young, E. C. Waide and Pryor & Sapinski for appellant.

Fairleigh, Straus & Eagles for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Burnam.

Appellant sought in this action to recover a judgment for damages for personal injuries which she alleges were due to the negligence of appellee's motorman in prematurely starting one of their trolley cars, on which she had been a passenger, while she was attempting to alight therefrom. A jury trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for the defendant. A reversal is asked upon the sole ground that the trial court did not properly define in its instructions to the jury the degree of care which the law imposed upon the appellee for the protection of its passenger. The instruction on this point reads as follows: "The court instructs the jury that it is the duty of the defendant to stop its cars long enough to permit its passengers to alight in safety when they reach their destination, and if they should believe from the evidence that at the time and place mentioned in the petition, the plaintiff was injured, and her injury was caused by the car on which she was a passenger being started before she could leave it in safety by the exercise of ordinary care, then the law is for the plaintiff and they should so find: Provided, She did not, by negligence, upon her part, contribute to cause the injury, and but for which she would not have been injured."

The only questions that the jury had to determine were whether or not the car on which appellant was a passenger stopped when she arrived at her destination long enough for her to alight therefrom with safety, and whether she exercised ordinary care in so doing. The court did not instruct the jury as to the degree of care due by a railway company to its passengers, but it did, in plain words, tell the jury what the duty of the defendant was under the particular facts testified to by the plaintiff, and on which she relied for recovery; and that it was negligence per se for a railroad company to have started their car without giving passengers who sought to alight therefrom time to do so with safety. The instruction complained of is more favorable to appellant than if the court had given to the jury an abstract instruction telling them that it was the duty of the defendant to have exercised the highest degree of care which a prudent man would, under like circumstances, have exercised to afford appellant a reasonable opportunity to alight in safety. This court has frequently approved instructions similar to that complained of. (L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Rains, 15 Ky. Law Rep., 424.) In our opinion the instruction properly defines the law of the case.

Judgment affirmed.

EVANS' ADM'R, &amp;c. v. EVANS, &amp;c.

(Filed May 12, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Decedent's estate—Waiver of rights of wife—E. died leaving his widow and five children and a child of a deceased daughter surviving him, all of whom were over twenty-one years of age. He left a valuable estate, consisting of both real and personal property. A few days after the death the widow wrote the county judge a note, in which she waived her right to administer on the estate, and requested that her son-in-law be allowed to qualify as administrator; she also stated in said note that she waived her rights in the property as widow, and agreed to accept a child's share. Afterwards a formal instrument to this effect was prepared for the purpose of being signed by all the parties, but some of the heirs refused to sign it. The widow afterwards brought this action, claiming her rights as widow, and stating that she being ignorant of her legal rights, was induced and persuaded to sign said instrument through misrepresentation, and asked that same be cancelled. The court granted her the relief prayed for, from which this appeal is prosecuted. Held—That the judgment of the lower court was correct as the widow could not waive her rights in the property without the consent of all the heirs, and they had not given their consent.

2. Husband and wife—Construction of statutes—The act of March 15, 1894, providing that the surviving widow shall have an absolute estate in one-half of the surplus personalty of her deceased husband repeals subsection 4, section 1403, Kentucky Statutes, which limited the rights of the widow to one-third of the surplus personalty where the deceased leaves issue.

Sweeney, Ellis & Sweeney for appellants.

Miller & Todd and Lucius P. Little for appellees.

Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson.

James R. Evans died a resident of Daviess county on April 5, 1899, leaving an estate consisting of something like $6,000 or $7,000 worth of realty and about $20,000 of personalty. He left surviving him his widow, Nancy E. Evans, and five children, also one grandson, the child of a deceased daughter. Previous to his death there had been some talk in the family about the widow taking a child's part in the estate instead of the interest given her by law, and there is some evidence that the decedent requested this, although there is a conflict of testimony on the subject. On the Sunday after his death there was a meeting of the heirs at law at the house of the widow, and it was there agreed that appellant Neel should qualify as administrator, the widow declining to qualify, and also expressing a preference for a child's part in the estate. On the next day Neel and two of the sons went to Owensboro for the purpose of Neel's qualification as administrator. The county judge declined to allow him to qualify without a writing from the widow waiving her right. Thereupon they returned home and had the following paper prepared, which was signed by her and acknowledged before a notary public:

“Whitesville, Ky., April 12, 1899.

“E. P. Taylor, Judge Davless County Court.

“Owensboro, Ky. :

“I, Mrs. Nancy E. Evans, widow of James R. Evans, deceased, hereby waive my preferred right to administer on his estate, and ask that you appoint W. S. Neel to that position. I also wish to receive a child's part in the division of said estate.

her
"MRS. NANCY E. x EVANS.
mark

"Attest: JOHN KITTINGER."

Neel returned to Owensboro with two of the sons on the 13th and qualified as administrator. While there they went to see a lawyer and had him put in writing the terms of an agreement to be signed by the widow and children settling the estate. The writing is in nine paragraphs. The first three paragraphs, which are all that are material to the case before us, are as follows:

"The undersigned, the widow and all the children and heirs at law of James R. Evans, deceased, who recently departed this life intestate, domiciled in Daviess county, Kentucky, agree among themselves as follows: ,

"1st. W. S. Neel, whose former wife was and whose present wife is a daughter of the intestate, Jas. R. Evans, is to qualify in the Daviess County Court as the administrator of the said Evans. The other heirs, or some of them, will become the surety in his bond as such administrator.

"2d. The said James R. Evans died owing few, if any, debts, but such as he did owe can be readily paid out of the funds on hand, or which are easily available. The undersigned, who constitute all the heirs at law of James R. Evans, are over twenty-one years of age. They do not want any appraisement of his estate made. The undersigned heirs, and the widow of the intestate, propose among themselves to settle and distribute the personal estate of said Evans without cost or legal formalities.

"3d. The undersigned, Nancy E. Evans, who is the widow, renounces her right to claim as widow, but wishes to have herself considered and treated as one of the heirs; or, to put it in a more homely phrase, she wishes to take a child's part, and all of the children whose names are attached to this agree that she may do so. The said administrator, Neel, will promptly reduce the personal assets of the said Evans to cash, and distribute them among the parties in interest. As fast as he collects, or has in his hands cash for distribution equal to $50 to each heir, he will distribute this among the heirs entitled to receive it. But in making such distributions, where any of the heirs are indebted to the estate, the sum distributed shall first be applied as a credit of the date of the distribution upon the debt which they may owe the estate. When all of the heirs have discharged their indebtedness then the distribution shall be in cash to each heir."

¶ They took the paper home, where it was signed by several of the children and by the widow, and it was then left there for the others to sign it. One of the daughters, Miss Dora Evans, was sick at the time, and when she got well declined to sign it. In this condition of affairs, and before the paper had been finally executed by all the parties, the widow, Nancy Evans, brought this suit to cancel it, and to recover her part of the estate as widow under the statute, alleging that she could not read or write; that her signature to the paper had been obtained by imposition, she being ignorant of her legal rights and not knowing that she thereby altered or diminished her interest in her husband's estate. The allegations of the petition were denied, and on final hearing the court decreed to her the relief sought.

It is earnestly insisted for appellant that the paper signed by the widow on April 12 relinquished her share in her husband's estate, and that this paper not being attacked in the petition, the judgment of the court is erroneous. But as will be seen above the paper referred to was addressed to E. P. Taylor, judge of the Daviess County Court. It does not purport to be a contract; it purports to be only a waiver of the widow's preferred right to administer on the estate and a request of the appointment of Neel. The concluding words of the paper are only the expression of a wish, and are no more than a reason for what precedes. The widow could not take a child's part except by consent of the heirs. None of them were parties to this paper, or bound by it in any way, and it did not bind the widow further than as a waiver of her right to administer on the estate.

In view of the age of the widow, the short time that had elapsed since her husband's death, her physical condition at the time, her inability to read or write, her want of counsel and ignorance of her rights, the court did not err in cancelling the paper April 13. The proof shows that she was in frail health; that she preferred to have what was set apart to her absolutely rather than a larger amount for life; that she had no idea what she was relinquishing and that she signed the paper because it had been gotten up by her son-in-law and her sons, supposing that they would not ask her to sign anything that she ought not to sign. By the statute she was entitled absolutely to one-half of the surplus personalty, amounting to about $10,000; while by the contract she got only one-seventh of this, or less than $3,000. Her life estate in one-third of the land was of more value than one-seventh of the land in fee, and was more desirable to her as she thus retained her home and the exempt property set apart to a widow. It is perfectly clear under the evidence that the old lady did not understand the sacrifice she was making, and the agreement not having been executed, and in fact never having been signed by all the parties, the court properly disregarded it. (Johnson v. Corbett, 5 Ky. Law Rep., 177; Tennelly v. Tennelly, 9 Ky. Law Rep., 850; McHarry v. Irwin, 85 Ky., 352.)

It is insisted for appellant that section 1403, Kentucky Statutes, subsection 4, to the effect that if the intestate leaves issue his widow shall have one-third of the surplus personalty, is not repealed by the act of March 15, 1894. (Kentucky Statutes, section 2132.) The latter act, however, provides that after the death of either the husband or wife the survivor shall have an absolute estate in one-half of the surplus personalty left by such decedent.

It also provides that all acts inconsistent with it are thereby repealed. One of the purposes of the act was to place the husband and wife on equality, and to give the surviving wife the same share in the husband's estate as the husband would have in her estate if he had survived her. The provision of the act is in conflict with the provision of section 1403, Kentucky Statutes, which had previously been in force, and repealed subsection 4 as well as subsection 3, substituting for them the rule that the surviving husband or wife should in all cases take one-half of the surplus personalty. It is also urged that the statute in force at the death of the intestate does not control. We held otherwise as to a widow's dower in Helm v. Board, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 1037. The authorities are also to this effect as to her rights in the personalty. (Sneed v. Ewing, 5 J. J. Marshall, 459; Townes v. Durbin, 3 Met., 352; Temple v. Brittan, 11 Ky. Law Rep., 467; Swearingen v. Nash, 14 Ky. Law Rep., 735; 2 Bishop on the Law of Married Women, section 49; Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 440.)

Judgment affirmed.

---

STONE v. BURGE.

(Filed May 12, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Personal representatives—Conversion of funds—Appellant qualified as administrator of H., who died leaving appellee as one of three heirs, she being an infant at her father's death. A tract of land was afterwards conveyed to appellant, and appellee upon arriving at twenty-one years of age instituted this action to recover one-third of said land, alleging that appellant had either purchased same with funds belonging to her, or for her benefit. Appellant, in defense, claims that he purchased the land with his own money. The lower court being satisfied from the evidence that appellant had collected large sums of money belonging to his intestate which he failed to account for, and evidently invested the same in said land, taking the title to himself in violation of his trust and in violation of section 2353, Kentucky Statutes.

Thomas W. Thomas for appellant.

Wright & McElroy for appellee.

Jas. A. McKenzie for Nellie Moore.

Appeal from Warren Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

Arch Howard died in 1895 intestate, leaving as his only heirs at law his daughter, Nannie H. Burge, a son, Ed. Howard, and a granddaughter, the only child of his deceased daughter, Virgie Moore. The appellant qualified as his personal representative. The intestate left some personal estate, choses in action and also a tract of land containing about fourteen acres. This land descended to the appellee, Ed. Howard and Nellie Moore. After the appellant had qualified as the personal representative Ed. Howard conveyed his one-third interest in the land to him. This took place while the appellee was an infant. She afterwards married H. H. Burge. After reaching the age of twenty-one she instituted this suit to compel the appellant to convey to her the one-third interest which had been conveyed to him.

The appellant defended the action upon the ground that he had used his own money in paying for the land. On the other hand, it is insisted that he used the money belonging to her to pay for it. The appellant claims that no estate had come into his hands except about $200, which was to the credit of the decedent in bank, which was used in paying funeral expenses, for a tombstone, etc. The appellee claims that about $2,800 went into his hands for her benefit. On cross-examination he admitted that he had collected two notes due the estate for $400 each. He also admitted that decedent a short time before his death assigned a certificate of deposit of $1,000 to him, which he afterwards collected and placed the proceeds to his own credit in bank.

The $1,000 certificate was placed in the hands of the appellant for the benefit of the appellee, or it was placed there for the benefit of the decedent.

As there is no issue here between the heirs of the decedent on this question, we forbear to express any opinion except to say that, in either event, a part of it belonged to the appellee. The appellant fails to show that he distributed any of the $1,000 and the $800 collected by him, except one hundred and thirty odd dollars, which he paid appellee. It is true he said that he paid her all her interest in it, but he fails to show how and wherein he did so. Besides, his conduct, as appears in this record, is not calculated to make us accept his statement without vouchers or satisfactory evidence of payment. There is no testimony in the record to show that the appellant had any money at the time this estate was placed in his hands. We are of the opinion that he paid for the one-third interest out of the money which came into his hands as proceeds of the certificates or notes, or both. In either state of the case he had in his hands belonging to the appellee a sufficient amount of money to pay for the land. Besides, the testimony is perfectly satisfactory that he bought the land for the appellee. He had the land conveyed to himself upon the statement that it could not be conveyed to the appellee because she was a minor, but said he would do so on her arrival at the age of twenty-one.

Section 2353, Kentucky Statutes, reads as follows: "When a deed shall be made to one person and the consideration shall be paid by another, no use or trust shall result in favor of the latter, but this shall not extend to any case in which the grantee shall have taken a deed in his own name without the consent of the person paying the consideration, or where the grantee, in violation of some trust, shall have purchased the lands deeded with the effects of another person."

It is insisted that, although it was the money of the appellee which appellant used in the purchase of the land, no trust resulted in her favor. She could not consent to the use of her money in the purchase of the land as she was a minor, therefore, she did not pay the consideration in the meaning of the statute. The statute expressly provides that it does not apply where the grantee in violation of some trust shall have purchased the land deeded with the effects of another person. The land was deeded to the appellant in violation of a trust, and he can not shield himself from a just demand of the appellee under the foregoing section of the statute. The guardian briefs the case for Nellie Moore, claiming that the trust resulted in her favor as well as the appellee. No appeal has been prosecuted in her behalf, therefore, there is no issue here for the disposition of the court.

The judgment is affirmed.

---

BANK OF MOREHEAD v. ELAM, &c.

(Filed May 12, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Bills and notes—Sureties—Indulgence to principal—This action was brought on a note which appellees had signed as sureties. In defense they pleaded that they were released by indulgence to their principal for a valuable consideration received. Held—That the evidence fails to show that any indulgence was given the principal on account of any consideration received, and the sureties were not released thereby.

B. F. Day & Son for appellant.

W. W. McGuire and Finley E. Fogg for appellees.

Appeal from Morgan Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

On the 16th of July, 1900, S. J. Maxey & Son borrowed from the appellant $500, for which they executed their note, payable four months after date, with J. M. Cottle and R. F. Elam as sureties. Including the days of grace the note matured November 19, 1900. After the note matured the appellant sent Maxey & Son a blank note to be signed by them and sureties for the purpose of renewing the note, and also a check drawn upon the appellant bank, to be signed by them (they having an account in bank) to pay the discount. Maxey & Son never asked the sureties to sign the note, nor did they send one to the bank in renewal of the one past due, or pay anything to have the time of payment extended unless the facts stated amount to that. Long after the note matured a check was sent to the bank and returned, because a stamp had not been placed upon it and cancelled. In returning the check the bank requested a stamp to be put upon the check and cancelled and returned.

The sureties endeavored to avoid a recovery upon the note upon the ground that the bank for a consideration had extended the time for the payment of the note without their consent. If this was not done, the sureties are liable upon the note. To show that this was done one of the members of the firm of Maxey & Son was introduced as a witness on the behalf of the defendant, who testified that he never had an interview with the officials of the bank in regard to the payment of the note or its renewal. He admitted writing a certain letter to the bank which shows that he did not send the check for the interest until March 1, 1901, and in which letter he said: "I have not been able to see the sureties on note. I will attend to it as soon as I am able to go and see the parties." He also admitted he wrote the bank a letter on February 14, 1901, in which he said that "he would reduce the note to $250," and said "if you want to, you can fill out a blank check for the interest and I will sign and return, so that you can have the use of that." These letters show that Maxey & Son did not regard that they had any agreement with the bank to extend the payment of the note on account of the payment of interest, or otherwise. They were promising to reduce the amount of the note or renew it. The uncontradicted testimony of the cashier of the bank is that the check was never charged to Maxey & Son, and the time for the payment of the note was never extended. The letter which the bank wrote to Elam on March 15 shows that they were expecting a renewal of the note, and that Elam and Cottle would again sign. The statement made in that letter was not at all inconsistent with the bank's position in the case, because when the letter is read in the light of the facts proven it is clear that the check was returned to pay discount on the renewal note. There is no evidence that the bank ever agreed to accept a check as a consideration for the extending of the time of the payment of the past-due note. But Maxey's letter shows that he was expecting to renew the note, and the check which he sent was to be used for that purpose. We think that the defendants wholly failed to sustain their defense, and the court should have given peremptory instructions to find for the appellant.

The judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

HIGGINS v. STOKES, &amp;c.

(Filed May 12, 1903.)

Husband and wife—Statutes of limitation—In 1876 appellant, a married woman, owned the fee-simple title to a tract of land which her husband sold and conveyed to appellee, but appellant did not unite in said conveyance. The husband and wife at that time removed from the land, and appellee took possession thereof and has held it continuously since. The husband died in 1900, and appellant instituted this action in 1902 to recover possession of said land. Appellant pleaded as a defense the thirty years' statute of limitation; also the fact that plaintiff's cause of action accrued more than fifteen years prior to the 15th of March, 1894; and that her disability as a married woman was removed by the act of the 15th of March, 1894, and that under section 2506, Kentucky Statutes, her right to recover the land in controversy has been lost. Held—That said statute did not have the effect to deprive a married woman of the benefit of the statutes of limitation. No limitation runs against a feme covert by reason of a sale of her land by her husband until after three years after the removal of her disability, except under the thirty years' statute. The statute did not run against appellant until the death of her husband, and the answer was insufficient to prevent a recovery.

Robertson & Thomas for appellant.

D. G. Park and W. H. Hester for appellees.

Appeal from Graves Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Burnam.

This action at law was instituted on the 4th of January, 1902, by the appellant, Martha Higgins, against the appellees, S. J. Mathews and Clint Stokes, to recover possession of the north half of lot No. 18 in the city of Mayfield, which she alleges was conveyed to her by the executors of her deceased father, John M. Gardner, in the division of his real estate among his heirs at law on the 14th day of April, 1863. She further alleges that at the date of this conveyance she was a married woman with several children; and that she and her husband immediately took possession of the property and lived upon it until December, 1876, when he, without her consent, and against her will, conveyed the lot to T. J. Reynolds by general warranty deed, in which she did not unite; and that shortly after the conveyance to Reynolds her husband moved her and her children from the property and surrendered the possession thereof to Reynolds, and that she continued to live with her husband as his wife until his death on the 16th of January, 1900; that the title to the property is still in her, and asked that she be adjudged the possession thereof. The defendants in the first paragraph of their answer deny that plaintiff is the owner of the lot sued for. In the second paragraph they plead and rely upon the thirty years' statute of limitation. In the third paragraph they allege that they and those under whom they claim have had and held the actual, adverse possession of the property described in the petition continually for more than fifteen years prior to the 15th day of March, 1894, and for more than three years thereafter; that plaintiff's cause of action accrued more than fifteen years prior to the 15th of March, 1894; and that her disability as a married woman was removed by the act of the 15th of March, 1894; and that under section 2506 of the Kentucky Statutes her right to recover the land in controversy has been lost.

The plaintiff filed a general demurrer to the third paragraph of the defendant's answer, which was overruled. Thereupon she filed a reply, in which she denied that her cause of action accrued more than thirty years before the filing of her suit. The defendants thereupon filed a general demurrer to the reply, which was sustained, and the plaintiff declining to amend, it was ordered that her petition be dismissed and plaintiff has appealed.

Section 2128, relied on to defeat recovery in this action, is as follows: "A married woman may take, acquire and hold property, real and personal, by gift, devise or descent, or by purchase; and she may in her own name, as if she were unmarried, sell and dispose of her personal property. She may make contracts, and sue and be sued, as a single woman, except that she may not make any executory contract to sell or convey or mortgage her real estate unless her husband join in such contract; but she shall have the power and right to rent out her real estate, and collect, receive and recover in her own name the rents thereof, and make contracts for the improvement thereof."

It is very earnestly insisted for appellees that as this statute clothes married women with the right to make contracts and sue and be sued as single women, that by necessary implication it repealed the statutes of limitation exempting women from its operation in three years after the removal of such disability. To support this contention we are referred to pages 239 and 240 of the 19th volume of the A. & E. Ency. of Law, 2d edition, and the cases there cited. The text referred to is as follows: "While there seems to be some conflict of opinion on the subject, the decided weight of authority is in favor of the view that the married woman's acts removing all the disabilities of married woman, and enabling them to sue and be sued, and to contract as if they were not married, repealed by implication the clauses in the statutes of limitations exempting such women from its operation, and causes the statutes to run against them as if they were single."

Numerous decisions from various courts are cited to support the text, but the following significant note by the annotator follows the citation of these cases: "The foregoing cases all deal with the proposition that the mere fact that a married woman could have brought her suit during coverture does not deprive her of the benefit of the exception in her favor in the statute of limitation. And this is the correct rule. There are few, if any, jurisdictions in which a married woman is not able to sue during coverture by her next friend, yet this power has never been held to affect the general exception, if the text, however, relates to a general and complete removal of disabilities not only as to suit but in other respects. In such a case there is room for the application of the maxim cessante ratione lege, cessat ipsa lex."

The statute relied on in this case does not remove all the disabilities of married women in the disposal of their real property. On the contrary, it expressly provides that "she may not make an executory contract to sell, convey or mortgage her real estate unless her husband join in such contract." Prior to the passage of the act of February 23, 1846 (Acts of 1845-46), it had been uniformly held that a husband could sell and convey the land of the wife so as to be operative during the life of the husband; and that consequently in such cases the wife's right of action did not accrue until the death of the husband. (Miller v. Shackelford, 38 Ky., 292; Butler &c. v. McMillan, 88 Ky., 41.) And whilst the effect of that act was to take from the husband the power to sell his wife's real estate, it secured to him the power to rent it out for three years at a time and to receive the rents therefrom. It was held in Rose, By, &c. v. Rose, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 417, that in marriages occurring before the passage of the act the husband was not deprived of that right by the act of 1894, declaring that marriage should give to the husband no interest in the wife's property. Under this decision appellant's husband would have had the right to rent out and receive the profits of her real estate for not more than three years at a time during his life. Under section 84, which was one of the provisions of the Civil Code long prior to the passage of the married woman's act, a married woman could sue alone for the possession of her property, if her husband refused to unite with her. And section 2525 of the Kentucky Statutes, which has been a provision of the statute law of this State for many years, provides: "If a person entitled to bring any of the actions mentioned in the third article of this chapter, except for a penalty or forfeiture, was at the time the cause of action accrued an infant, married woman or of unsound mind, the action may be brought within a like number of years after the removal of such disability or the death of the person, which happens first, which is allowed to a person having no impediment after the right accrued."

In Onions v. Covington and Cincinnati Elevated Railroad, Transfer and Bridge Co., 21 Ky. Law Rep., 820, was an action to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff from the operation of railroad trains in front of her property, the defendant plead the statute of five years' limitation, to which she replied that she was a married woman when the railroad track was located, and that her coverture continued until December 19, 1894. In that case, after a full consideration of the question, the court said: "Although a married woman, after 1876, might sue alone as to her general estate, she was by no means relieved of the disability of coverture; she was not only under the dominion of her husband, but he owned absolutely all her personal property. He might reduce to possession her choses in action, and he had the right to the use of her real estate, with power to rent it out for not more than three years at a time, and receive the rent. * * * And that it would be contrary to the entire spirit of our laws to allow limitation to run against her during her husband's lifetime; that the legislature did not intend to do so is apparent from the broad language of the exception and the fact that it was brought over into both the revised and general statutes after the adoption of the Code, which empowered the wife to sue in her own name in certain cases."

And in Branson v. Thompson, 81 Ky., 387, it was held that no limitation ran against a feme covert by reason of a sale of her land by the husband until after three years after the removal of her disability, except under the thirty years' statute. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the statute did not run against appellant until the death of her husband, and that the court erred in overruling her demurrer to the third paragraph of the defendant's answer and in dismissing her action.

The judgment is, therefore, reversed and cause remanded, with direction to sustain the demurrer to the third paragraph of defendant's answer and for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

CAMPBELLVILLE LUMBER CO. v. SPOTSWOOD & SON.

(Filed May 12, 1908—Not to be reported.)

* Contracts—Agents—This action was brought by appellant to recover of appellee the price of a carload of lumber which was purchased by appellee subject to inspection by P., his agent. Appellant claims that P., the agent of appellee, waived the right to make the inspection and permitted the agent of appellant to load the car under his own inspection. Held—That there was no sale of the lumber to appellee as it did not come up to the terms of the contract, and P., as the agent of appellee, had no authority to waive the right of inspection.

Denton & Robinson for appellant.

O. H. Waddle for appellees.

Appeal from Pulaski Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

This action was instituted by the appellant for the purpose of recovering the sum of $241.66, being the contract price of a carload of lumber which it claims to have sold and delivered to appellee at the agreed price of $18 per thousand feet. The answer of appellee put in issue the sale of the lumber to them. The negotiations concerning the matter in controversy are contained in the following correspondence between the parties:

“Lexington, Ky., October 1, 1901.

“Campbellsville Lumber Co.,

“Campbellsville, Ky.:

“Gentlemen—Name us price on 4x4 common poplar; also 4x4 clear saps from your stock on the Southern Railway. Make price F. O. B. shipping point, and give us the name of the point.

“Yours very truly,

“E. R. SPOTTSWOOD & SON,

“By ——— MILLER.”

To which the following reply was made:

“Campbellsville, Ky., 10-2, 1901.

“E. R. Spottswood & Son,

“Lexington, Ky.:

“Gentlemen—In reply to yours 10-1 we quote you 4x4 com. poplar at $18 per M. F. O. B. Somerset and Moreland.

“Yours respt.,

“THE CAMPBELLVILLE LUMBER CO.”

Appellee's second letter is as follows:

“Lexington, Ky., October 3, 1901.

“Campbellsville Lumber Co.,

“Campbellsville, Ky.:

“Dear Sirs—If you will notify me when it will be convenient for your man to load two or three cars of 4x4 com. poplar at Moreland, we will instruct our man there to take it up with him, so there will be no dispute about the lumber after it is loaded. Price to be $18 F. O. B. cars at that point, as per your quotation of the 2d. Let us know when it will be convenient to take it up.

“Yours very truly,

“E. R. SPOTTSWOOD & SON,

“By ——— MILLER.”

To which the following reply was made:

Campbellsville, Ky., 10-4, 1901.

"E. R. Spottswood & Son,

Lexington, Ky.:

"Gentlemen—Yours 10-3 rec'd. We can load common at Moreland next week, and will so instruct our man to load as long as your man and our man can agree; we have no trouble elsewhere with our common.

"Yours respect.,

"THE CAMPBELLSVILLE LUMBER CO."

On October 7, 1901, appellee wrote the following letter:

"David Peyton,

Moreland, Ky.:

"Dear Sir—I am in receipt of a letter from the Campbellsville Lumber Co., stating they can load some of the common at Moreland this week, so long as our man and their man agree. See their inspector and load up two or three cars, and be certain and tally every board with their man, and do not let him get the best of you. Take nothing but a good grade of lumber. Let me know after seeing him when you can load it.

(Signed) "E. R. SPOTTSWOOD & SON,

"By ——— MILLER."

Appellant instructed its agent, J. J. Watson, to have the cars placed upon the switch at Moreland, and to proceed with loading the lumber as long as he and the agent of appellee, David Peyton, could agree.

It appears that upon the morning when the loading of the lumber was to begin appellee's agent went to the lumber yard, and there had an interview with J. J. Watson; as to what was said in this interview the evidence is contradictory. Peyton states that he said to Watson that he would be unable to assist him in the inspection of the lumber on that day, as he had business which would prevent, but that if the loading was deferred until the next day he could take part in the inspection to be done. Watson, with several corroborating witnesses, states that Peyton told him to go on with the loading; that he could not be present, but that it would be all right, and he would accept the lumber as loaded by Watson.

After this conversation Peyton left, and performed no duty in inspecting the lumber. Only one car was loaded by the agent of appellant, and this was billed to appellee at Lexington. After this shipment appellant wrote the following letter to appellee:

Campbellsville, Ky., 10-12-1901.

"E. R. Spottswood & Son,

Lexington, Ky.:

"Gentlemen—Our man at Moreland writes us that he had the cars placed to load the com. poplar at Moreland, and Mr. Peyton told him to go ahead and load it. He loaded one car, and is waiting further orders. Will you accept his inspection on the balance, or send a wire to him on receipt of this whether to load the rest of it? His address is: J. J. Watson, Moreland, Ky.

"Yours truly,

"THE CAMPBELLSVILLE LUMBER CO."

In the meantime, however, the car which had been shipped arrived at Lexington, and in the opinion of appellee fell far short of coming up to the grade known as common; whereupon they wrote to appellant, declining to receive it at the contract price, but offered to receive and pay for it at its market value, this to be established by disinterested inspection. This proposition having been declined, appellee notified appellant that the carload of lumber was subject to their order.

The pleadings present the simple issue as to whether or not the carload of lumber shipped from Moreland to Lexington was purchased of appellant by appellees. For the purposes of this case it may be admitted that Watson's testimony as to what took place between him and Peyton, concerning the loading of the lumber at Moreland, is true. The evidence shows that Peyton was only the special agent of appellee, to inspect the lumber contracted for in the correspondence herein set out; he had no general authority to represent them in the matter of the inspection of lumber, and he had no power to waive inspecting the lumber in question, or to delegate to Watson the authority given to him in the premises.

While appellant may not have known the private instructions given to Peyton in his letter of employment, they did know that he was there to inspect the lumber, and not to waive its inspection for his principal. The very object of his employment, as shown by the correspondence between the parties hereto, was to protect his principal from injury arising from the loading of lumber inferior in grade to that contracted for; in other words, his employment, as appellant well knew, was for the purpose of preventing any after controversy in regard to the lumber purchased, and this could only be done by an inspection on his part as the lumber was loaded. That appellant realized that Peyton had no authority to waive the inspection of the lumber is shown by their letter of October 12, 1901, in which they recite to appellees Watson's conversation with Peyton, and that he had loaded one car, and ask whether they would accept his (Watson's) inspection of the balance. Had appellant not been aware of Peyton's want of authority to waive the inspection of the lumber this letter of inquiry would not have been necessary. The contract of purchase was based upon the inspection by Peyton, and as this did not take place, there was no sale. The shipment of the car to appellees was unauthorized, and they were not bound to receive it.

In the trial below a jury was waived, and the law and facts submitted to the court. As the conclusions reached by the judge are in harmony with the views of this opinion, the judgment is affirmed.

---

ALBIN CO. v. FIRTH CARPET CO.

(Filed May 12, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Contracts—Compromise—In 1899 appellant purchased from appellee 100 rolls of carpet, to be delivered in installments of twenty-five rolls each. Appellee delivered twenty-five rolls, and failed to comply with its contract by delivering the remainder. A compromise was made, by which appellant released appellee from the delivery of seventy-five rolls of carpet, and appellee agreed to furnish appellant twenty-five rolls of carpet at the same price as the year previous. Part of these goods were delivered, but appellant refused to receive or pay for them. Suit was then brought to recover the price for the first twenty-five rolls delivered, when appellant set up a counterclaim for damages for failure to comply with the first contract, claiming that the compromise was without consideration. Held—That appellant can recover nothing on its counterclaim as the compromise was based on a sufficient consideration.

Forcht & Field and O'Neal & O'Neal for appellant.

W. W. & J. R. Watts for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson.

Appellee, the Firth Carpet Co., is a manufacturer of carpets, and appellant, the Albin Co., is a dealer in Louisville. On June, 15, 1899, appellant signed an order for 100 rolls of carpet. The order was taken by appellee's drummer subject to approval. By the terms of the order twenty-five rolls of the carpet were to be delivered immediately, and the rest in installments of twenty-five rolls on the 15th day of September, October and November, 1899, respectively. When the order reached appellee it at once wrote appellant that it had accepted that portion calling for immediate shipment, and appellee, a few days later, replied, asking it to forward the carpet ordered for immediate shipment. This shipment was made. The other installments were not shipped, and appellant having failed to pay for the carpets shipped, in March, 1900, appellee's drummer again visited Louisville, and a compromise agreement in writing was made, by which, in consideration that the Albin Co. agreed to let off the Firth Co. from filling all of the order given the year before, the Firth Co. agreed to send twenty-five rolls of carpet designated by the Albin Co. at the prices at which they were sold in 1899. A part of these goods were shipped by the Firth Co. according to the contract, but the Albin Co. declined to receive and pay for them as agreed, and thereupon this suit was filed to recover for the twenty-five rolls of carpet which had already been shipped and received. By way of defense to the suit the Albin Co. pleaded as a counterclaim damages for the nonfulfillment of the original order as to the seventy-five rolls of carpet to be shipped in September, October and November, 1899. The case was tried before a jury, who found for the plaintiff.

The chief contention on the appeal is that the compromise agreement made in March, 1900, was without consideration. The original order was expressly taken subject to approval. While the Firth Co. had no right to accept the order in part and reject it in part without the consent of the Albin Co., still it might do so with its consent. The letter which the Firth Co. wrote expressly stated only that it had entered that portion of the order calling for immediate shipment. The Albin Co. made no objection to this, but, on the contrary, wrote the Firth Co. to forward the carpets ordered for immediate shipment. This correspondence left open the question whether the Firth Co. was to fill the order as to the other installments, and when it did not do so, there was at least ground for a difference in good faith between the parties as to their legal rights, and a compromise of such a dispute is based upon a sufficient consideration. Besides, the Albin Co. was under no obligation by the terms of the original contract to receive any rolls of carpet in March, 1900, and the Firth Co. was under no obligation to ship any at that time at the original price. The compromise, therefore, upon the basis of the shipment of twenty-five rolls at that time at the original price was based upon a sufficient consideration, as it substituted for the original contract one of different legal effect; and after that contract was made, if the Firth Co. had broken it, the Albin Co. could have recovered damages only for the breach of that agreement, and not damages for the breach of the original contract, for that agreement was substituted by the parties for the original contract.

The instructions of the court were more favorable to appellant than the facts of the case warranted. Under the proof the court might properly have told the jury that the contract of March, 1900, was based upon a sufficient consideration.

Judgment affirmed.

---

BELL v. CITY OF HENDERSON.

(Filed May 12, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Municipal government—Negligence—Appellee having permitted a citizen to construct a platform over a gutter in front of his place of business is bound to exercise the same degree of care towards keeping it in a safe condition for pedestrians as if it had constructed it, but it is not the insurer of its safe condition. In the present case a hole having existed in the platform for such a short time that the authorities did not know of its existence, and could not have known it by the exercise of reasonable diligence, the city was not liable for personal injuries that occurred by reason thereof.

John T. Handley and M. C. Givens for appellant.

John F. Lockett for appellee.

Appeal from Henderson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Burnam.

Appellant brought this action against the city of Henderson to recover damages for a personal injury alleged to be due to the negligence of the defendant, in that they permitted Norris & Lockett, hardware merchants, to erect and maintain a rotten and unsafe platform in front of their business house on First street, in the city of Henderson, extending from the curbing of the pavement across the gutter to the street beyond. Plaintiff alleged that on the night of April 5, 1902, as he was passing over this bridge or platform for the purpose of boarding a street car, his foot went through a hole in the platform, which resulted in spraining his ankle and permanently injuring him. The defendant, the city of Henderson, for answer, denied that they knew that the bridge or platform complained of was rotten or unsafe in any particular, or that it was in fact so, and say that it was erected and maintained by Norris & Lockett for their own convenience, without having asked or obtained the consent of the city authorities that it should be erected. They further allege that the hole in the platform, which occasioned the injury to plaintiff, had only existed for one day prior to the accident, and that they had no notice thereof.

The testimony is to the effect that the gutter in front of the business house of Norris & Lockett was unusually deep, and that some time prior to the accident, with the full knowledge of the city authorities, they placed the platform across the gutter to enable them to receive and deliver goods from their storehouse; that on Friday evening, before plaintiff was hurt on Saturday night, a plank in the platform was broken; that the firm immediately ordered lumber to repair the break; that the city authorities did not know of this hole in the platform; that it was behind a stack of wire, and could not be seen by one passing along the pavement, but was visible from the street. Defendant's mayor and engineer, whose business it was to see after the streets, testify that they had no notice of the hole until after the accident. The circuit judge gave the jury a peremptory instruction to find for the defendant, and plaintiff has appealed.

It was the duty of the defendant to use ordinary care to keep its streets and alleys free from obstructions and in safe condition for persons traveling in the usual modes by day and night. When they permitted Norris & Lockett to erect and maintain a platform in the street, which was liable to be used by pedestrians passing from the pavement to the street, it was as much bound to see that it was kept in good condition as if they had erected it themselves. And their liability for defects in the platform is exactly the same as their liability for defects in any other part of the street. But a municipality is not an insurer against accidents to persons using its thoroughfares. It is not liable for injuries caused by defective streets in the absence of actual notice of such defect, or unless they have existed so long that notice or knowledge thereof should be imputed to them. And notice should not be imputed where the defects are of recent origin, and particularly where they are conceded in anywise. Whilst generally the jury should determine as a question of fact whether a city has such notice, yet where the facts are undisputed, and but one reasonable inference can be drawn from them, it becomes a question for the court to decide. (Smith's Modern Law of Municipal Corporations, sections 1545-1546; Elliott on Roads and Streets, sections 626-627; City of Covington v. Assman, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 415; Canfield v. City of Newport, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 2218.)

In the absence of actual notice of the defect in the platform which occasioned the injury, and the obscure nature of this defect, and the short time which it had been in existence, we are of the opinion that the city authorities can not be charged with lack of diligence in failing to discover it in time to have prevented the accident complained of, and that the trial court properly instructed the jury to find for the defendant.

Judgment affirmed.

---

PORTER, &c. v. CITY OF CLINTON.

(Filed May 12, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Municipal government—Lien for improvement of sidewalks—This action was brought against appellants to enforce a lien for the reconstruction of a sidewalk in front of their property on Washington street in obedience to an ordinance of the city passed under authority of section 3643, Kentucky Statutes. The defense interposed is a denial that the sidewalk is one of the highways of the city. Held—That the evidence shows that Washington street had been used and claimed as a highway by the public under a claim of right for more than fifteen years prior to the making of the sidewalk in question, and this in itself is sufficient to establish a public highway.

E. T. Bullock for appellants.

J. H. Shelton for appellee.

Appeal from Hickman Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Parker.

This action was instituted by the city of Clinton, in the Hickman Circuit Court, for the purpose of enforcing a lien claimed by it for the sum of $18, being appellants' proportion of the cost of making a sidewalk along the highway in front of their property.

Appellee is a city of the fifth class, and the law upon which it based its right to improve the highways within its boundaries is contained in section 3643 of the Kentucky Statutes, which is as follows: "The city council is hereby authorized and empowered to order any work they deem necessary to be done upon the sidewalks, curbing, sewers, streets, avenues, highways and public places of such city. The cost and expense incurred in constructing or repairing streets, avenues, highways, sewers and public places shall be paid out of the general fund of the city. The expenses incurred in making and repairing sidewalks and curbing shall be paid by the owners of the land fronting and abutting thereon, each lot, or a portion of a lot, being separately assessed for the full value thereof, in proportion to the frontage thereof to the entire length of the whole improvement, not exceeding a square, sufficient to cover the total expense of the work; but the owners of such property shall have the right to make such improvements, if they prefer doing so, instead of paying for same. Whenever any expense or cost of work shall have been assessed on any lands as herein provided, the amount of said expense shall become a lien upon said lands, which shall take precedence of all other liens, and which may be enforced by the contractor or city in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Practice."

In pursuance of this authority the city council of Clinton passed an ordinance, No. 32, which is as follows:

"The city council of the city of Clinton do ordain as follows:

"Section 1. That all sidewalks hereafter built in the city of Clinton shall be according to the following specifications:

"Those made of wood shall be built on three oak stringers, 2x5, not less than twelve feet long, the floor to be made of oak boards 1x6, to be fastened by two tenpenny nails in each and one in the middle of each board; that all brick walks hereafter built around the public square shall be made ten feet wide. At other places any property holder desiring to build brick instead of wood walk has the privilege of so doing. All brick walks to be made of hard red brick, laid herring bone on four inches of sand, sloping one-half inch to the foot."

In order that the special work involved in this case should be constructed, it is alleged in the petition that general order No. 2 was passed at a regular meeting of the city council of Clinton, by which the marshal was ordered to build new sidewalks along the highway in front of appellants' property, from the county jail to the top of the hill south of the town, and the mayor was directed to give the necessary legal notices to all parties living, or owning property, along the route of the proposed sidewalk. In pursuance of this order the improvement was duly and legally made, being about six hundred and sixty feet of sidewalk, at a cost of $90, of which appellants' proportion amounted to the sum of $18, for which appellee prayed a judgment awarding it a lien upon the property of appellants, which was described in the petition. The answer denied that the sidewalk in question was upon the highway, and alleged that it was wrongfully placed upon appellants' property without their consent, and denied the lien claimed by appellee. Without going into a minute analysis of the pleadings it is sufficient to say that they aptly presented for adjudication the issue of fact as to whether or not the sidewalk made was a part of one of the public highways of the city of Clinton. Upon this issue a good deal of evidence was adduced by both sides, and the chancellor decided it adversely to appellants. In this conclusion we concur.

A great preponderance of the evidence shows that Washington street, in front of appellant's property, had been used, and claimed, as a highway by the public, under a claim of right, for more than fifteen years prior to the making of the sidewalk in question, and this in itself is sufficient to establish a public highway; indeed it seems that the sidewalk involved in this litigation is a successor to the one along the same route, which had been there so long that it had become worn out, and required renewal. No objection seems to have been made by the appellants to the work being done during its progress, and we are of opinion that the testimony on this issue fully sustains the finding of the chancellor.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

---

HOLLINGSWORTH, BY, &c. v. PINEVILLE COAL CO.

(Filed May 12, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Negligence—Master and servant—Appellant, a boy about fourteen or fifteen years of age, was employed by appellee as a trapper in one of its mines. He had just opened the doors to permit cars of coal to pass through when the draft put out his lamp, and being without matches to relight it climbed on the rear of a car to get one from the driver, and while passing over the car fell between two cars and was run over and seriously injured. In this action to recover damages from appellee the court gave a peremptory instruction to find for appellee. On appeal, Held—That the instruction given was proper as appellee was not liable for the injury, as appellant had left his post of duty and was not engaged in any duty required of him when injured. It was his duty to keep supplies of matches on hand to relight his lamp, and appellee owed him no duty when he was injured, and it does not appear that the driver knew of his presence on the car.

Jesse D. Tuggle for appellants.

J. R. Sampson and W. E. Cabell for appellee.

Appeal from Bell Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

This action was instituted by the appellant in the Bell Circuit Court for the purpose of recovering damages against the appellee for injuries received by him while in its employ, acting in the capacity of trapper. Upon the trial of the case, at the conclusion of appellants' testimony, the court, upon motion of appellee, instructed the jury peremptorily to find in its favor. From this judgment the case has been appealed to this court. The facts are these: Charlie Hollingsworth, a boy some fourteen or fifteen years of age, was engaged in the work of trapping for appellee. Appellee is a corporation operating a coal mine in Bell county, Kentucky. The traps of a coal mine are airtight doors across its shafts and entries for the purpose of regulating its ventilation. A trapper's duty is to stand at these airgates, and to open them when a train of cars passes, and to at once close them after the necessity of their being open has ceased to exist.

At the time of the injury complained of appellant was on duty at one of the traps in appellee's mine; a train of cars, loaded with coal, was coming out, and appellant, as was his duty, opened the door and permitted it to pass through. It seems that the opening of the trap produced a strong current of air, which, upon this occasion, blew out appellant's lamp, as it had frequently done before. Appellant, it appears, was without a match with which to relight it, and as the train of cars passed by him on its way to the mouth of the mine he climbed upon it from the rear, for the purpose of obtaining a light from the driver. While passing along on top of the cars, from the rear to the front, in order to reach the driver, he lost his balance, fell between the cars, was run over and badly injured. It was appellant's business to keep himself supplied with lamp, oil and matches, and he was not in the discharge of any duty he owed to appellee when he was hurt; on the contrary, he had left his post, in violation of the trust for which he was employed, and was engaged in doing a dangerous act, against which he had been warned. It was not contended that the driver knew of his presence on the cars, or that any act of his in any way tended to cause the accident which occurred. Appellant was out of matches, by reason of his own neglect to furnish himself with a supply sufficient to meet the contingencies of his duties as trapper.

There is no evidence in the record showing that appellee failed in any duty it owed to appellant; he had been engaged in the work of trapping for some time, and thoroughly understood it; he was not hurt in the performance of his work, but received the injuries complained of in doing an unauthorized act, entirely apart from his employment. This state of fact being shown on the trial by appellant's own evidence, the court correctly instructed the jury, at the close of his testimony, to find for appellee.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

---

REED, &c. v. REED, &c. (No. 1).

SAME v. SAME (No. 2).

SAME v. SAME (No. 3).

SAME v. SAME (No. 4).

(Filed May 12, 1903—Not to be reported.)

1. Personal representative—Allowance to attorney—Contempt—Appellant, as executor, having administered a large estate, retained a balance of $2,100 in his hands to await the termination of a contest of the will then pending. After the termination of the will contest he asked the court for an allowance to his attorney for services rendered in probating the will. The court made an allowance of $300 attorney's fees, and gave the executor credit for only one-half of it. On appeal it is insisted that no attorney's fee should be allowed appellant as three of the heirs employed attorneys of their own. Held—That it was the duty of appellant to employ counsel to probate the will, and he can not be deprived of this right by the heirs employing counsel. They can employ additional counsel at their own expense. Five hundred dollars should have been allowed as a reasonable attorney's fee, and should have been allowed as a charge against the estate. Pending the litigation $400 was paid into court which belonged to the executor individually, which the court refused to order paid over to him as he was in contempt for refusing to produce a picture of his father to enable copies to be made therefrom as directed by the court. Held—That as he was in contempt of court in not producing the picture, or giving a sufficient account of its absence, the court properly refused to grant any relief to him while thus in contempt of its orders. The chancellor will never hear a litigant who is in contempt of court or grant relief to him. He can renew his motion upon relieving himself of contempt.

2. Payment of money into court—The court erred in requiring the executor to pay into court a sum of money in his hands before distribution of same as he was amply solvent.

Bodley, Baskin & Morancy for appellants.

W. W. Thum and J. D. Reed for appellees.

Appeals from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson.

These four appeals are heard together. On the former appeal it was held that the executor was entitled to an additional allowance of $500 over and above the amount allowed him in the circuit court, but in all other respects the judgment of the circuit court was approved. (Reed v. Reed, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 2186.) By that judgment the entire personal estate was settled, except about $2,100, which had been held back by the executor, as an appeal had been taken from the order probating the will and was then pending in the Jefferson Circuit Court. On November 16, 1901, the will contest ended. The executor moved the court to make an allowance to him for his necessary expenses, including attorney's fee in the will contest; also to allow him commission on the sum received by him since the former judgment or then remaining in his hands. The court allowed him his commissions, but fixed the amount of his attorney's fee at $300; and only allowed him credit for one-half of it. The court also, on March 4, 1902, entered an order requiring the executor to pay into court the amount in his hands, $2,166.38. He superseded this order, and thereafter, on March 25, the court entered a personal judgment against him in favor of appellees for $457.74 each.

The ground for requiring the executor to pay the money into court appears to have been that he was leaving the city for a trip to Texas, and it was apprehended that he might not pay over the money promptly, if ordered to do so before his return. He had distributed an estate of something like $80,000. He was abundantly solvent, and we see nothing in the record to warrant the court in taking the estate out of his hands. An executor is entitled to discharge the duties of his trust, and he should not be required to surrender the estate committed to him before a distribution is ordered unless for grave reasons.

It was the duty of the executor to defend the will contest and to employ counsel to maintain the will under which he was appointed. His counsel fees in this respect stand on precisely the same plane as any other necessary cost incurred by the executor. It is true the other three devisees served a written notice on him that they would employ their own counsel, and would pay no part of the fee of his counsel. If this was a case where contribution was sought by one devisee of another, then the case of Thirwell v. Campbell, 74 Ky., 163, would be in point. (Simms v. Birdsong, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 1049; 21 Ky. Law Rep., 75.) But it was the duty of the executor to probate the will, and when an appeal was taken and the case was to be tried de novo it was his duty to employ counsel, and see that the will was probated. This duty the law imposed upon him, and he could not delegate it to the devisees. They could employ additional counsel if they saw fit, but the law required of him the exercise of ordinary care in the preparation of the case. His counsel fees, therefore, are as essentially a part of the cost of the settlement of the estate as the expenses he incurred in securing testimony. As to the amount of the fee a number of lawyers were introduced. Two fixed the amount of the fee at $1,000, two at $700 and two at $500. No disinterested witness put it lower, and in view of all the facts and considering the amount of the estate, we can not, without disregarding the evidence, put the fee at less than $500. We, therefore, conclude that the allowance to the executor for his counsel fees should be fixed at $500, and should be paid out of the estate in his hands. (Taylor v. Minor, 90 Ky., 49.)

During the progress of the case $400 belonging to the executor was paid into court. There was a picture of his father which was claimed by appellant as his own property. The circuit court, adopting the conclusion of his commissioner, held that this picture was not the property of appellant, but a part of the estate of his testatrix. Appellant and his three brothers all showed a great desire to have the picture of their father, and so the circuit court being unable to divide the picture between them and desiring to gratify them in the possession of the picture of their father, in view of their conflicting statements as to the ownership of this picture, directed three copies of it to be made, and that the four pictures should then be divided among the four brothers by lot, the cost of making the three copies to be paid out of the estate. To have sold the picture would have been to delay the settlement of the estate, and we did not see anything to be gained by this, and, therefore, on the former appeal we affirmed this part of the judgment, not perceiving that the rights of the parties were substantially prejudiced, as each of them would thus get his father's picture, which he seemed especially anxious to have. After the return of the case to the circuit court a rule was taken on appellant to produce the picture, so that the copies might be made. In answer to this rule he responded that the picture had been lost; how, he did not know, and he could not find it. The court sustained a demurrer to the response, and he failed to plead further, and being in contempt of court in not producing the picture, refused to grant his motion for leave to withdraw the $400 in court coming to him.

The response of appellant to the rule was insufficient. He did not show that the picture had been lost without his fault, or that he had taken the proper care of it, nor did he show what he had done with the picture, or how it became lost, or why he was unable to state specifically about this. As he was in contempt of court in not producing the picture, or giving a sufficient account of its absence, the court properly refused to grant any relief to him while thus in contempt of its orders. The chancellor will never hear a litigant who is in contempt of court, or grant relief to him. He can renew his motion upon relieving himself of contempt.

The judgment requiring the executor to pay money in his hands into court and the personal judgment against him in favor of appellees are reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion. Appellants recover cost in first two appeals and appellees recover cost in the other two. The judgment on the third and fourth appeals is affirmed.

Judge Barker not sitting.

---

BEELER v. CITY OF CLINTON.

(Filed May 12, 1902—Not to be reported.)

E. T. Bullock for appellant.

J. H. Shelton for appellee.

Appeal from Hickman Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

This case being identical with the case of Mamie Porter, &c. v. City of Clinton, ante, 2485, decided May 12, 1903, except as to amount of claim, the judgment is affirmed for the reasons given in the opinion therein.

---

EIDSON, CLERK v. FLOUNLACKER.

(Filed May 13, 1903.)

Municipal government—Mandamus—Appellee was a laundry agent holding a license from the city of Bardstown for one year, commencing on the 1st day of April, 1901, and running until the 1st day of April, 1902, and that on the 11th day of March, 1902, he paid to the treasurer of the city $10, the license then prescribed by ordinance for transacting his business, and demanded that the clerk should issue to him a license for one year. The clerk refused to issue the license, whereupon appellee instituted this action for a mandamus to compel him to issue it. In the second paragraph of his answer appellant alleges the fact that appellee was transacting business under a license which had not expired, and in the third paragraph he states that the council had by ordinance changed the license fee from $10 to $25, and that the demand for the issuance of the license on the payment of the $10 fee was made for the purpose of defrauding the city of the amount to which it was entitled. Demurrers were sustained to the second and third paragraphs of the answer, and the mandamus was granted, from which this appeal is prosecuted. Held—That the court erred in sustaining a demurrer to the second and third paragraphs of the answer, and in granting the mandamus. On the 28th of March, 1902, when this action was instituted, the ordinance imposing the license tax of $25 was in operation, and the court had no authority under section 477, Civil Code of Practice, to issue the mandamus compelling a purely ministerial officer to issue to him a license in defiance of a law of the city, and the express orders of his superiors. Besides, he could not compel appellant to issue a new license to him before the expiration of the old one, as it was within the rights of the city to change the rate and increase the charge for licenses of this character.

R. C. Cherry and Geo. S. and John A. Fulton for appellant.

John D. Wickliffe for appellee.

Appeal from Nelson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Burnam.

The appellee, Lewis Flounlacker, asked in this suit that a writ of mandamus should issue against the defendant, W. T. Eidson, city clerk of Bardstown, to compel him to issue to him a license to do business as a laundry agent in the city. He states that on the 11th day of March, 1902, he paid the city treasurer $10, the license tax imposed upon laundry agents by the city ordinances for one year, and took his receipt therefor, which he presented to Eidson and demanded that he should forthwith issue to him a license as a laundry agent, running from the 11th day of March, 1902, to the 11th day of March, 1903, but which he had without right refused to do. The appellant in the second paragraph of his answer to appellee's petition alleged that on the 1st day of April, 1901, a license as a laundry agent had been regularly issued to appellee for a term of one year from that date; and that this license was in full force and effect on the 11th day of March, 1902, when he demanded that a new license should be issued to him covering a part of the time for which he already held a license. And in the third paragraph of his answer he alleges that on the 11th day of February, 1902, at a regular meeting of the city council of Bardstown, there was offered and read an ordinance increasing the license tax upon laundry agents to $25 per annum, and which was passed to the next meeting of the city council on the 9th day of March, 1902; that on that date the ordinance was passed and it was in full force and effect more than fifteen days before the expiration of appellee's license as a laundry agent, which had theretofore been issued to him; that appellee knew of the proposed pending ordinance and sought to renew his license on the afternoon of the day when it became effective to avoid the effect of this new ordinance and to defraud the city out of its proper and legitimate revenue; that he called the attention of the city council to the demand of appellee, and was directed by an order regularly entered upon the city records by the council not to issue the license, and also directed the city treasurer to return to appellee the $10 which he had received from him through mistake; and that the treasurer did, before the institution of this suit, tender to appellee the $10, which he refused to accept. Appellee demurred generally to the second and third paragraphs of the answer, which was sustained, and defendant declining to plead further, judgment was entered requiring appellant to issue the appellee a license to do business as a laundry agent from the 11th day of March, 1902, to the 11th day of March, 1903, and to reverse that judgment this appeal is prosecuted. Section 477 of the Civil Code de-defines the writ of mandamus: "As an order of a court of competent and original jurisdiction, commanding an executive or ministerial officer to perform an act, or omit to do an act, the performance or omission of which is enjoined by law, and is granted on the motion of the party aggrieved or the Commonwealth when the public interest is affected."

When this action was instituted by the appellee, on the 28th day of March, 1902, the new ordinance increasing the license fee had become effective, and appellant had been notified by the city council, the governing authority of the city, not to issue licenses to laundry agents, and to appellant in particular, unless he paid a license fee of $25 in compliance with the new ordinance.

"The remedy by mandamus rests upon the legal rights of the relator on the one hand, and on the legal obligations and duties of the respondent on the other, and can not be predicated solely upon the equitable rights and obligations existing between the parties.

"And will not lie to compel the performance of an act which is forbidden by, or contrary to, the provisions of a statute or ordinance, or to compel an inferior officer to do a particular thing which his superior in authority has lawfully ordered him not to do." (A. & E. Ency. of Law, volume 19, page 730.)

Whatever may have been the rights of appellee in the premises previous to the passage of the new ordinance on the 11th day of March, 1902, if he had in good faith complied with the conditions of the existing ordinance, it is clear that after the new ordinance became effective he could not, under the express language of the Code, resort to the writ of mandamus to compel appellant, a purely ministerial officer, to issue a license to him in defiance of the law of the city and the express orders of his superiors. At the date of the institution of this suit appellant had no power or authority to issue a license to appellee without there had been previously paid into the city treasury the sum named in the ordinance. And we are inclined to the opinion that as appellee at the date of his application for a new license already had a license authorizing him to do business as a laundry agent in the city to the 1st of April, 1902, he could not compel appellant to issue a new license to him before the expiration of the old one, as it was within the rights of the city authorities to change the rate and increase the charge for licenses of this character, and they could not, at the instance of a party who was already enjoying the privilege, be compelled to anticipate the expiration of his license and grant him a new one to do the same thing. (Weeder v. Arnold, 5 Okla., 588.)

The lower court erred in sustaining a demurrer to the second and third paragraphs of appellant's answer, and the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with instruction to overrule the demurrer and for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

---

FRANK v. FRANK, &c.

(Filed May 13, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Burnett & Burnett and Wallace Coulter for appellant.

Harris & Marshall for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Law and Equity division.

Extension of response filed April 23, 1903.

We are asked by the appellant, Katie Frank (Bollinger), to extend the response filed on the 23d of April, 1903, to the petition of appellee (Clara B. Frank), for an extension of the opinion delivered herein on February 26, 1903, on the ground that counsel for appellee insist that there is no longer a valid judgment in favor of appellant for $2,707.90; and that all that the appellant is entitled to, or can legally collect, is the uncollected balance of the pendente lite allowance, which was in arrears at the date of the original judgment. We have heretofore decided that the order of the Jefferson Circuit Court, dated December 1, 1900, and which vacated the judgment originally entered therein on the 15th of May, 1879, did not affect subsequently the judgment entered on the 17th day of May, 1897, in favor of appellant, Katie Frank (Bollinger), for $2,707.90, with interest from May 17, 1897, and cost; and that this last judgment was still in full force and unaffected by the opinions of this court. That there may be no mistake as to what was decided, this addition is made to the response of April 23, 1903.

---

GARDNER v. WHITE.

(Filed May 13, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Boundary—Agreement to establish—Appellant and appellee were neighbors owning adjoining farms, and disagreeing as to the location of the boundary line, agreed that a surveyor should locate and mark the line, which was done in the presence of the parties, and the agreement accepting it was executed by both parties and placed on the record. Afterwards appellant objected to it, and refused to permit appellee to place his fence on the agreed line. In this action to enforce the agreement, Held—That the disputed question as to the correct location of the line was a sufficient consideration to uphold the agreement entered into by the parties, and after the agreement had been fully executed it was binding upon the parties, and appellee is entitled to place his fence on the agreed line and take possession of the land up to that line.

E. T. Bullock for appellant.

R. T. Tyler for appellee.

Appeal from Fulton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Appellant and appellee were neighbors, owning adjoining farms. They disagreed as to the correct location of the division line between their lands. To settle the dispute they agreed upon a surveyor, A. E. Brevard, to locate the true line, which he undertook to do. With both parties present, with such title papers as appear to have been necessary, he established and marked a division line between them, with which they then expressed themselves as satisfied. Thereupon they reduced to writing an agreement adopting the line so fixed as the true division line between them, which they signed, acknowledged and caused to be recorded in the proper county clerk's office. Later appellant undertook to retract his action, and to reject that of the surveyor in fixing the agreed division line, and refused to permit appellee to place his fence thereon, hence this suit.

We are of opinion that the disputed question as to the correct location of the line was a sufficient consideration to uphold the agreement entered into by the parties fixing the line as a definite one, and that after the agreement had been executed fully, it was binding upon the parties to it.

Appellant's defense seems to be that there was a mistake made by the surveyor in locating the line, but we are unable to find that this is so.

The judgment of the circuit court adjudging the true line to be that fixed by Brevard, and requiring appellant to remove his fence and to suffer appellee to take possession of the land in dispute up to that line, is affirmed.

---

CINCINNATI TOBACCO WAREHOUSE CO. v. MATTHEWS, &c.

(Filed May 13, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Fraudulent conveyances—Husband and wife—Curtesy—Homestead—Appellant having a return of no property found on judgments against appellee, instituted this action in equity to set aside as fraudulent a deed of conveyance to his son and son-in-law of his interest as tenant by curtesy in a large tract of land which belonged to his wife, then deceased, for the recited consideration of $500. The court refused to set aside said conveyance, from which this appeal is prosecuted. Held—That as appellee had married his wife before the present statute affecting the property rights of married women, his right by curtesy existed, which was worth about $1,500, and the proof shows that said conveyance was made to those who were members of his own family, and was evidently made with the intent to defraud creditors. The appellee should be permitted to set up his claim of homestead, and the property sold and appellee paid $1,000 as the value of his homestead, and the overplus applied to appellant's debts.

J. T. Simon and Simon & Bailey for appellant.

Berry & Webster for appellees.

Appeal from Harrison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

Appellant having obtained judgments in the Harrison Circuit Court against appellee, W. N. Matthews, one for $694.50, with 6 per cent. interest from November 13, 1895, and costs, subject to credits of $50, paid May 18, 1897, and $64.65, paid January 5, 1898, the other for $200, with 6 per cent. interest from October 8, 1894, and costs, and having caused executions to issue thereon, which were returned wholly unsatisfied, instituted this action in equity in the same court to set aside a deed made by appellee, W. N. Matthews, to his son and son-in-law, the appellees, Geo. C. Matthews and W. H. Daugherty, whereby he conveyed to them, for the recited consideration of $500, his interest as tenant by curtesy in the several tracts of land described in the deed, aggregating 200 acres, situated in Harrison county.

The conveyance was attacked upon the ground of fraud, it being alleged in the petition that the deed was without consideration, and that it was executed with the fraudulent intent upon the part of both grantor and grantees to hinder, delay and prevent the former's creditors, and especially the appellant, from collecting their debts held against him. The separate answers of appellees deny the fraud alleged, and upon the issue thus formed depositions were taken by the parties, and upon the submission of the case judgment was rendered by the chancellor sustaining the conveyance and dismissing the petition, and this court is now asked to reverse that judgment. Though loath to reverse the chancellor upon a mere question of fact in an equitable action, this court has never refused to do so when satisfied that the judgment sought to be reversed is not sustained by the evidence, or is found to be against the weight of the evidence. The only question presented by the record in this case for our decision is as to the genuineness of the conveyance attacked. A conveyance from a failing or insolvent debtor to one who sustains to him a near relationship of blood or interest must necessarily be regarded with suspicion, and especially is this true if the consideration appears to be inadequate, or the possession and control of the property embraced by the deed of conveyance remains with the debtor. In City National Bank v. Gardner, 5 Ky. Law Rep., 689, this court declared that "where on the eve of insolvency of a debtor his entire estate or a greater part of it, is found in the name of his son, it requires proof of the most satisfactory character to establish the fairness of the transaction."

The 290 acres of land described in the deed from W. N. Matthews to his son and son-in-law seems to have been owned by the wife of the former, who died June 28, 1901. Their marriage took place long before the enactment of the present statute fixing the property rights of the husband in the estate of his deceased wife, and consequently the appellant, W. N. Matthews, took under the statute in force at the time of the marriage, and as there was issue born alive of the marriage, he became, upon the death of the wife, owner of an interest in the land as tenant by curtesy, and such was the interest attempted to be conveyed by the deed in controversy.

It appears from the evidence that one S. K. Lee, agent of appellant and entrusted with the collection of the notes upon which judgments were subsequently rendered against appellee, W. N. Matthews, went to see him about the notes a few days after the death of his wife, that is, about July 1, 1901, and asked him to pay them, but appellee said he did not know when he could pay them, and would fix no time for doing so; indeed he seemed to be wholly indifferent as to their payment. Lee, upon leaving, informed him that appellant would probably sue him on the notes, and suit was brought thereon July 12, 1901.

Lee says that appellee, W. N. Matthews, informed him that he then had thirty acres of tobacco growing on the farm, one-half of which was his. It will be observed from the reading of the deposition of W. N. Matthews that the statements of Lee are undenied by him except as to the quantity of the tobacco, Matthews saying that he told Lee that there were twenty instead of thirty acres of that crop; but whatever the quantity, he refused Lee's request to mortgage it to secure appellant's debt. An examination of the deed will show that it bears date July 10, 1901, and was acknowledged by the grantor before the clerk of the Harrison County Court July 19, 1901. So we find from the record that the debtor five days after being threatened with suit by appellant's agent, and two days before the suit was instituted, rid himself of all of his property by a conveyance thereof to his son and son-in-law, the latter then living with him on the land conveyed. In addition it is shown by the evidence that the consideration named in the deed is grossly inadequate, for the interest conveyed is probably worth $1,500, or, in any event, much more than $500. Besides, there was no change of the possession or use of the land following the execution of the deed. It still remains, to all appearances, as much in the control and use of the grantor as if no deed had been made.

The tobacco grown on the place was all sold, and its proceeds, except a small amount paid to the son-in-law, Daugherty, seems to have been appropriated by W. N. Matthews. It is true he claims to have paid a few small debts, but from the personal estate of his deceased wife, and the sale of the tobacco, to say nothing of the proceeds of his interest in the land, if the sale thereof could be regarded as genuine, there apparently came to his hands a considerable sum of money, the disposition of which he has not satisfactorily accounted for, and certainly none of it was paid on appellant's debt. From his rapidly approaching insolvency, the great haste with which the land and personal property of the appellee, W. N. Matthews, was attempted to be disposed of after he received notice of appellant's purpose to sue him, the near relationship to him of the parties to whom the conveyance was made, his continued control of and use of the land after the date of the conveyance, and the gross inadequacy of the consideration recited in the deed, we are of opinion that the deed to his son and son-in-law was made with the fraudulent intent on his part to hinder and delay his creditors in the collection of their demands against him, and that the especial purpose thereof was to prevent the collection of appellant's judgment debts against him.

We are further of opinion that the grantees named in the deed, by reason of their acquaintance with the financial condition of W. N. Matthews, and of the circumstances attending the execution of the deed of conveyance, must be presumed to have known of his fraudulent purpose in making the conveyance to them. In any event the proof of fraud furnished by the record is of such a character as to place upon the transferees the burden of showing that the conveyance was without knowledge on their part of the fraud intended by the transferrer, and this they have failed to do. (Harrison v. Calvert, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 890; Warden v. Cohen, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1149; Huffman v. Leslie, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1981.)

The appellee, W. N. Matthews, does not set up claim to a homestead in this case, but as under section 1708, Kentucky Statutes, his right thereto is provided for because of his having survived the wife, it will be proper, if he so requests, to permit him to amend his answer to the extent of making good his right to such homestead, in which event his interest in the land in controversy may be sold, and if the price realized exceeds $1,000, he will be entitled to that sum in lieu of the homestead, and only the excess over that sum should be subjected to the payment of appellant's debt.

For the reasons herein indicated the judgment of the lower court is reversed and cause remanded for further proceedings consistent with the opinion herein.

CITY OF MIDWAY v. LLOYD.

(Filed May 13, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Municipal government—Negligence—Instructions—Appellee recovered a judgment for $350 damages against appellant for negligence of the city in permitting an obstruction to remain on a sidewalk in said city, viz., a disc plow, against the beam of which appellee ran one night and sustained severe and painful injuries. On appeal errors in instructions given are relied on for a reversal. Held—That it was prejudicial error to instruct the jury that it was the duty of the city to use ordinary care to keep its pavements "safe" for the use of pedestrians, as the duty of the city goes no further than to use such ordinary care to keep its pavements in a reasonably safe condition for use. The second instruction is incorrect as it assumes that the projecting of the plow beam over the pavement was an obstruction per se. The jury should have been permitted to decide the fact as to whether the extent to which the plow beam projected over the pavement, under all the circumstances, did or did not leave the street at the time and at the place of appellee's receiving his injuries reasonably safe for pedestrians using the street with ordinary care. The court should have given to the jury an instruction offered, to the effect that if they believed from the evidence that the sidewalk at the time and place of the accident complained of was in a condition to be reasonably safe for pedestrians traveling thereon and exercising reasonable care, they ought to find for the defendant.

D. L. Thornton for appellant.

D. T. Edwards for appellee.

Appeal from Woodford Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

The appellant, city of Midway, was sued by the appellee, James Lloyd, in the Woodford Circuit Court for $5,075 in damages on account of a personal injury sustained by coming in contact with an obstruction, alleged to have been negligently permitted by the appellant to be, and remain, on one of the public streets of the city.

Appellant's general demurrer to the petition was overruled by the lower court whereupon it filed answer, traversing the averments of the petition, and in addition pleaded contributory negligence on the part of appellee, which latter plea was denied by reply. The trial by jury resulted in a verdict in appellee's favor for $350 in damages, and appellant's motion for a new trial having been overruled it prosecutes this appeal to reverse the judgment of the lower court.

The injury to appellee occurred on the evening of the November election, 1901, about dark. He and a companion were hurrying, perhaps running, along one of the streets of the town of Midway, to obtain the election returns then about to be announced, when he ran against the iron beam of a disc plow, which stood in the street near the curbing, with the beam extended from twelve to eighteen inches over and upon the pavement, thereby bruising and injuring his leg to such an extent as to cause him to be confined to his bed for several weeks. At the point of the accident stone steps leading from a building there located projected into the pavement two feet and eleven inches opposite the plow beam, and as the pavement at that point was only about eight feet wide, there was left a space of from three and one-half to four feet between the stone steps and the end of the plow beam for the travel of pedestrians. It further appears that there was a coal oil lamp on either side of the point of the accident, each being at a distance of thirty or forty feet therefrom, and both of which were giving light at the time appellee received his injury.

It appears from the evidence that this plow, or one like it, had been allowed to thus project over the pavement for several weeks, in the exact spot where it was located when appellee received his injury, and the evidence conduces to show that it constituted an obstruction, the existence of which had continued long enough for the officers of the town of Midway to have been informed of its presence, and if so, it was their duty to have required its removal by the owner. Upon the other hand, the officers, or such of them as were introduced as witnesses, testified that the plow did not obstruct the street, and that they did not know of its presence on the sidewalk. Though appellee's place of business was but a short distance from the plow, and he doubtless knew in a general way of its projecting over the pavement, he could hardly be expected to appreciate the danger of coming in contact with it, in passing it under such circumstances as attended his haste to receive the election returns. At any rate, the question of whether he was guilty of contributory negligence on the occasion of receiving his injuries, and also of whether the authorities of the town of Midway were guilty of negligence in permitting such an obstruction to be and remain upon the sidewalk, and the further question of whether the presence of the obstruction rendered the pavement at that point unsafe for travel, were matters which the jury had the right to determine from all the facts before them, under proper instructions from the court, and the only question presented by the motion and grounds for a new trial, which we regard it necessary to consider, is as to the propriety of the action of the lower court in the matter of giving and refusing instructions.

The clearest statement of the doctrine upon which municipal corporations may be held liable for such injuries as are here complained of is found in Dillon on Municipal Corporations, section 1006, where it is said: "The law does not require a municipal corporation to respond in damages for every injury that may be received on a public street. The corporation is not required to have its streets or sidewalks so constructed as to secure absolute immunity from danger in using them, nor is it bound to employ the utmost care and exertion to that end. Its duty, generally stated, is only to use due and proper care to see that its sidewalks are reasonably safe for persons exercising ordinary care and prudence."

Briefly stated, this rule only requires the municipality to use ordinary care to keep its streets in such a condition as will make them reasonably safe for persons traveling over them; it is also required of those using the streets that they shall exercise ordinary care, to avoid any and all obstructions that may be encountered by them upon the streets.

The following are the instructions given by the lower court in this case over the objection of the appellant:

"No. 1. The court instructs the jury that it was the duty of the defendant city to use ordinary care to keep its pavements safe for the use of pedestrians traveling thereon, and the jury are further instructed that it is the duty of those using said pavements to use ordinary care to prevent injury to themselves while using the same.

"No. 2. If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant negligently suffered and permitted the pavement on Gratz street, in Midway, to become and remain obstructed by the projection of the iron beam of a disc plow over a portion of said pavement, and shall further believe from the evidence that the plaintiff while using ordinary care for his own protection, came in contact with said iron beam, and was injured thereby, the jury ought to find for plaintiff in such damages as he has sustained thereby, not exceeding $5,075, the amount claimed in the petition, and in fixing such damages, if any, they may take into consideration his mental and physical suffering, his loss of time, his expense for medical attention, and the diminution of his power to labor or earn money, if any; and unless the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff was injured by and through the negligence of the defendant, they ought to find for the defendant."

Other instructions were given which we think free of error, though formal objection was made to all the instructions by appellant at the time they were given. The two copied in the opinion are the only ones of which it now seriously complains. The first of these instructions is, in our opinion, incorrect because it told the jury that it was the duty of the appellant to use ordinary care to keep its pavements safe for the use of pedestrians. when its duty goes no further than to use such care (ordinary) to keep its pavements in a reasonably safe condition for use.

The second instruction is likewise incorrect, in that it assumes as a fact that the projecting of the plow beam over a part of the pavement was an obstruction per se, and such as would render the appellant liable whether the extension of such projection was one inch, a half inch, or eighteen inches, and without regard to whether or not it had continued long enough to charge appellant with notice of its presence. In other words, it eliminates altogether from the consideration of the jury the fact as to whether the extent to which the plow beam projected over the pavement, under all the circumstances, did, or did not, leave the street at the time and at the place of appellee's receiving his injuries reasonably safe for pedestrians using the street with ordinary care. It is not too much to say that appellant was entitled to have submitted to the jury the question of whether the pavement, notwithstanding the projection over it of the plow beam, at the time and place of the injury to appellee, was in a reasonably safe condition for the use of pedestrians passing thereon with ordinary care.

This court has in repeated decisions passed on this question. In the City of Covington v. Asmon, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 415, in which damages were sought to be recovered by Asman of the city of Covington for injuries sustained from the stepping into a hole in the pavement caused by a missing brick, the court said: "In instruction No. 1, given to the jury, they were told that if a hole or depression existed in the sidewalk, with loose bricks lying about, and that appellee's injuries were received in consequence of such depression, that they should find in her favor, if they believe from the evidence that the defendant knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care could have known, of the existence of such hole or depression in the sidewalk long enough to enable them to have had it repaired before the date of appellee's alleged injury, if they also believe that at the time of such injury appellee was exercising ordinary care in walking along the sidewalk. This instruction was erroneous and prejudicial because it did not submit to the jury for their determination whether the sidewalk at the time and place where the injury occurred was in a reasonably safe condition for the use of persons of ordinary care and prudence."

In the case of the City of Wickliffe v. Moring, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 419, the plaintiff recovered damages for injuries received by reason of a fall caused by a loose plank in the sidewalk. The following instructions given to the jury by the lower court were expressly approved by this court as containing the law on this subject: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant's sidewalk, at the time and place at which plaintiff claims to have been hurt, was not in a reasonably safe condition and repair for use by the public, and that she was injured by reason thereof, and that the defendant, City of Wickliffe, through its mayor, councilmen, or street commissioner, had knowledge or notice of such unsafe condition of the sidewalk, or might have had knowledge, or notice thereof, by the use of ordinary diligence on the part of such officers, and that a reasonable length of time had elapsed in which it could have repaired said sidewalk after it received such knowledge, or notice, and before the injury occurred to the plaintiff, then the law is for her," etc.

"No. 2. Before the jury are authorized to find for the plaintiff in this case they must believe from the evidence not only that the sidewalk where she claims to have been hurt was in an unsafe and dangerous condition, and that she was thereby injured, but they must further believe from the evidence that the defendant had notice thereof, and failed to exercise ordinary diligence in making repairs."

To the same effect are the following additional authorities, all emanating from this court: City of Covington v. Johnson, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 602; City of Louisville v. Johnson, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 685.

Tested by the foregoing authorities, we are constrained to hold that instructions 1 and 2, given the jury by the lower court, were not only erroneous, but prejudicial as well. We are, however, unable to find any error in the court's refusal to give instructions asked by appellant, except that instruction "F," which was as follows, should have been given: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the sidewalk in the city of Midway, at the time and place of the accident complained of in the petition, was in a condition to be reasonably safe for pedestrians traveling thereon, and exercising reasonable care, they ought to find for the defendant."

This instruction, we think, presents an aspect of the law applicable to the case bearing upon the defense relied on.

We find no error in the admission or rejection of evidence by the lower court, but on account of error in the instructions specifically indicated herein the judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with directions to the lower court to set aside the verdict of the jury, the judgment entered thereon, and to grant appellant a new trial, and for further proceedings consistent with the opinion herein.

GALVIN, &amp;c. v. UNION CENTRAL LIFE INS. CO.

(Filed May 13, 1903.)

Insurance—Forfeiture of policy—Payment of premium—On the 1st of February, 1900, S. made application to an agent of appellee for a policy for $1,000 on her life, payable to her child. At the same time the agent accepted the note of her husband for the premium, payable four months after date, without any conditions whatever attached to same. At the same time there was delivered to the assured a receipt, denominated a "binding receipt," and on the 23d of February, 1900, a regular receipt was executed for same. In November following S. died, and the appellee refused to pay the policy, claiming that as the note was not paid at maturity the policy was, according to its terms, forfeited. In this action to recover the amount of said policy, Held—The clause in the policy providing for the forfeiture of the policy for nonpayment of any premium notes only applies to notes executed by the assured, and not to notes executed by third persons and accepted by the company for the premium. It was not intended that the assured should become guarantor for the payment of notes so accepted, and appellee can not avoid its liability on this ground.

W. W. Thum and Forcht & Field for appellants.

Burnett & Burnett and Robert Ramsey for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

On the 1st day of February, 1900, Sallie E. Galvin made application to appellee's agent for a policy on her life, payable to her child, W. T. Galvin. When the application was signed by her the agent (Huggins) asked J. W. Galvin for his note, the amount of the first premium. Mrs. Galvin told him at the time that she had the money with which to pay it, but the agent took her husband's note for it, which is as follows:

"Louisville, Ky., February 1, 1900.

"Four months after date I promise to pay to the order of C. C. Early, State Superintendent Union Central Life Insurance Co., $22.07, without discount or defalcation, value received, negotiable and payable at First National Bank, Louisville, Ky., with interest at 6 per cent. per annum. For premium on policy in said company.

(Signed) "J. W. GALVIN."

At the time of the execution of this note there was delivered to the assured a receipt, denominated on its margin "binding receipt."

When the policy was delivered the following receipt was also delivered to her:

"Premium, $22.07. Union Central Life Insurance Co., Cincinnati, O.

"Received $22.07, being the first premium upon policy No. 202,723, issued upon the life of Sallie E. Galvin, continuing said policy in force to the 30th day of January, 1901, at noon. This receipt is subject to the conditions of any and all notes which have been given, or may be given, for the amount of the said premium, or any part thereof. This receipt is not valid unless paid; also countersigned and dated the day of payment by C. C. Early, agent.

"C. W. HUGGINS, Agt.

"Paid at Louisville, Ky., this 23d day of February, 1900.

"E. P. MARSHALL, Secretary.

"CLEM W. HUGGINS, Agt."

On the left-hand margin of this receipt appears the following: "Agents are not authorized to grant permits, make or order contracts or waive forfeitures."

The assured, Sallie E. Galvin, died during the month of November, 1900.

The appellant, J. W. Galvin, as guardian for W. T. Galvin, brought this action against appellee to recover the amount of the policy, to wit, $1,000. The appellee answered, denying that the first premium was ever paid, and averring that the policy lapsed, or was forfeited, by reason of the failure to pay the note, copied above, at its maturity, June 1, 1900. Issues were formed by the pleadings, a trial was had, and when the evidence was heard the court, on motion of the appellee, peremptorily instructed the jury to find for it. To all of which appellant objected and excepted, and the case is here on appeal.

The facts in addition to those stated are in substance as follows: "Doctor J. W. Galvin failed to pay the note at its maturity, and the appellee then treated the policy as void from that date, but some time in the month of July, 1900, J. W. Galvin entered the office of appellee in Louisville, Ky., and found one Rodman, the assistant superintendent, and one Reich, the bookkeeper, and called for his note, which was produced and paid, with interest to that date; when Early, the superintendent, entered and ascertained that the note had been paid he sent Rodman and Reich at once to the office of Dr. Galvin with the money, and offered to return it, and asked for the note; Galvin refused to accept the money or return the note. Appellee afterwards registered a letter to Galvin containing the money, and he refused to receive the letter. Before this payment of note by Galvin, and after it became due, and the policy forfeited, as claimed by appellee, Dr. Hood, the examining physician, had called on Sallie E. Galvin, at the instance of appellee, as claimed by appellant, and at the instance of appellant, as claimed by appellee, and made an examination of her with a view to the reinstatement of the policy. This examination or certificate was forwarded to the company at its home office, and the company refused to reinstate the policy and reported the fact to Early, its superintendent at Louisville, Ky. If the policy had been forfeited by the nonpayment of the note by J. W. Galvin when it became due, then the company had the right, under its contract, to refuse to reinstate the policy unless a certificate of health was furnished.

The record shows that between the issue of the policy and the last examination the assured, Sallie E. Galvin, had an operation performed and her uterus removed, and this fact was stated in the certificate, and it is presumed that this fact caused the company to refuse a reinstatement of the policy, but it was shown that she had recovered and was in good health at that time. This court is of the opinion that if the policy was forfeited by the failure of J. W. Galvin to pay the note when due, then the payment of it by him in July, under the circumstances stated, did not have the effect to revive or reinstate the policy. The money received by Rodman and Reich under a misapprehension of the facts, did not have the effect to bind the appellee. The question arises, was the policy forfeited by reason of the failure of J. W. Galvin to pay the note when due? The receipt copied contains this provision: "This receipt is subject to the conditions of any and all notes which have been given, etc."

From an inspection of the note it will be seen there is not a condition of any kind in it. The policy contains this provision: "The failure to pay, if living, any of the first three annual premiums, or the failure to pay any notes or interest upon notes given to the company for any premium on or before the days upon which they become due, shall avoid and nullify, etc."

We are of the opinion that the words "pay any notes, interest, etc.," refer to notes executed by the assured. Certainly the words can not be construed to refer to notes executed by third parties taken by the company and accepted in satisfaction of the liabilities of the assured. The appellee's counsel refer to two cases decided by this court which they claim are like this one, and settles this case in favor of the appellee. The cases are Moreland v. Union Central Life, 104 Ky., 129, and Crutchfield v. Union Central Life, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 2300. We can not accept the conclusion of appellee's counsel. In both of the cases referred to the notes were executed by the assured, and not by a third party. The note and receipt in this case and the note and receipt in the Moreland case are identical, except the note in this case was executed by a third party. In the Moreland case it was executed by the assured. The receipt in the Moreland case shows that the premium was paid by a note; in this case the receipt does not show that the premium was paid by a note. It is not reasonable to construe this contract as referring to notes executed by third parties making the assured guarantor for their prompt payment, and that the company will not be derelict in the collection of such notes, and if it should be the forfeiture of the assured's policy.

In this case the company took the note of J. W. Galvin for the first premium, bearing interest from its date, February 1, 1900, and on February 23 delivered the policy to the assured and the receipt herein copied, showing that the premium had been paid, which appears from this record to have been paid by the note of J. W. Galvin which had been drawing interest from the first of the month. This appears to have been beneficial to the company. By the acceptance of the note it made interest which it would not otherwise have made. On the facts as they appear in this record we are of opinion that the court erred in giving the peremptory instruction. There are other questions of minor importance appearing in the record, but we consider it unnecessary to discuss them.

For the reasons stated this cause is reversed and remanded to the lower court for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

---

ÆTNA LIFE INS. CO. v. KAISER.

(Filed May 13, 1903.)

Insurance—Suicide—Instructions—Appellee's husband held a policy of life insurance in appellant company, which contained the following clause: "If the insured shall, within one year from the date hereof, commit suicide, while sane or insane, * * * this policy shall be null and void." Within about a month after the issual of the policy the insured died from the effects of a pistol shot wound through the heart. This suit was brought on the policy, and appellant relied alone upon the defense of suicide. Appellant had the burden of proof, and introduced evidence showing that the deceased had come to his mother's home, gone to the room he had formerly occupied, partly disrobed himself, called his sister to go for his mother and tell her to come to him. After his sister had gone but a few feet from the room she heard a pistol shot and returned, and found him lying across the bed with a mortal wound, from which he died. It further proved that the deceased's undershirt was powder burnt, and that when found lying across the bed the revolver was lying not far from his right hand, with one chamber empty and the other four loaded. Appellee declined to introduce any evidence when appellant asked for a peremptory instruction in its behalf, which was refused. The court gave an instruction to the effect that the jury should find for the plaintiff unless they believed that the insured shot himself with the purpose of taking his own life; but that if they believed from the evidence that he shot himself with the purpose and intention of taking his own life, then the law is for the defendant, and they should so find whether the insured at the time he shot himself was sane or insane. A verdict and judgment resulted for plaintiff, from which this appeal is prosecuted. Held—That the court properly refused to give said peremptory instruction. The rule is settled that where the circumstances are such as that they may well admit of two or more conclusions, either of which may be true, it can not be said that there is not a conflict of evidence within the proper significance of the term, for while the evidence might produce one conclusion in the mind of the judge as to the truth of the disputed fact, it might as well produce another and different one in the minds of the jury, and the instructions given fairly submitted the question at issue.

2. Evidence—The court properly refused to permit the coroner, who was a physician, to testify as to whether, in his opinion, the death of the insured was self-inflicted or not. The opinion of the witness as to the manner of the death of the insured is not a relevant fact. Expert evidence is not admissible to decide disputed questions of fact. A copy of the coroner's inquest offered was not competent evidence, nor were the proofs of death prepared and presented to the company competent as substantive evidence. Had any person who had made a statement in said proof been introduced as a witness the proofs might have been used to contradict him, or if the issue had been raised as to whether proper proofs had been furnished the company, the proofs filed would be competent on this issue.

Grubbs & Grubbs for appellant.

Harris & Marshall for appellee.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Common Pleas division.

Opinion of the court by Judge O'Rear.

Appellee's husband, John A. Kaiser, Jr., effected an insurance upon his life with appellant in the sum of $1,000 payable to appellee within sixty days after proof of death of the insured. The policy contained this provision: "If the insured shall, within one year from the date hereof, commit suicide, while sane or insane, * * * this policy shall be null and void."

Within about a month after the issual of the policy the insured died from the effects of a pistol shot wound through the heart. He was a young man, about twenty-two years old, had been married about six weeks, was apparently in good health, with no evidence of morbidity or insanity. He had recently lost his employment as a laborer in a printing establishment, but his employer had told him that he could return when he desired. He was shown to be indebted in an inconsiderable amount. His domestic relations were shown to be pleasant. In the morning of the day of his death he borrowed a revolver from a friend with the statement that he was going to certain quarters of the city that evening to make collections. Directly afterward he went to his mother's home where he was in the habit of going about that hour every morning, passed his sister, and went to the room that he had occupied before his marriage. He removed a part of his clothing, called his sister to go for his mother, and tell her to come to him. After his sister had gone but a few feet from the room she heard the pistol shot, and upon immediately returning found him lying across the bed with a mortal wound, from which he died within a few minutes. There was no witness to the shooting.

In this suit by appellee upon the policy appellant relied alone upon the defense that the insured had, within twelve months from the issual of the policy, committed suicide while sane or insane. The issue was joined upon this defense, and was the sole issue in the case. Appellant had the burden of proof in the case, which consisted in showing the foregoing facts, with the additional detail that the deceased's undershirt was powder burnt, and that when found lying across the bed the revolver was lying not far from his right hand, with one chamber empty, and the other four loaded.

Appellee declined to introduce any evidence, when appellant asked for a peremptory instruction in its behalf, which was refused. The court gave in lieu the following instruction:

"Gentlemen of the jury: In this case you should find for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,000, with interest from the 4th of May, 1901, unless you shall believe from the evidence that the assured, John A. Kaiser, Jr., shot himself with the purpose of taking his own life.

"But, if you shall believe from the evidence that he shot himself with the purpose and intention of taking his own life, then the law is for the defendant, and you shall so find, whether the said John A. Kaiser, Jr., at the time he shot himself was sane or insane."

The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff. Appellant's principal contention upon this appeal is that upon the close of its evidence, which was the only evidence offered in the case, the court should have peremptorily directed a verdict for it. This argument is based upon the idea that the evidence showed conclusively that the death of the insured was self-inflicted, and that the attending circumstances with equal clearness indicated a suicidal intent. A very reasonable inference from the circumstances detailed in evidence is that the injury was self-inflicted, nor would it be unreasonable to further infer that the purpose was self-destruction. But these conclusions or inferences rather are by no means necessary from the proof and circumstances. They are at best but allowable.

The rule in this State governing the granting of peremptory instructions is that where there is any evidence tending to support the contrary side, or where there is a conflict of evidence upon the issue to be determined, such an instruction will not be given. As the evidence in this case was wholly circumstantial, it was clearly within the province of the jury to deduce from it such rational conclusions as might, in their judgments, be in harmony with the probabilities of the matter. Where the circumstances are such as that they may well admit of two or more conclusions, either of which may be true, it can not be said that there is not a conflict of evidence within the proper significance of the term, for while the evidence might produce one conclusion in the mind of the judge as to the truth concerning the disputed fact, it might as well produce another and different one in the minds of the jury.

Here the defense, and the sole defense, was the affirmative plea that the insured had committed suicide. It was a plea in confession and avoidance. Unless it was sustained by proof sufficiently preponderating to convince the judgments of the triers of the fact, appellant must fail. The jury were not required to believe from the evidence that the death of the insured was caused from the accident or from his negligence, nor were they required to believe from the evidence that it had been inflicted by another. Unless the evidence was sufficient to satisfy them that the death was suicidal, their verdict must have been for appellee, for it was not material to her right of recovery that the jury should have been able to determine from the evidence, and satisfactorily to themselves say, what was the cause of his death. The insurer, the appellant, agreed to pay the sum insured in the event of the death of Kaiser while the policy was in force, unless within a year of its date his death was caused by suicide. Therefore, when appellee had shown the death of the insured during the time the policy was in force, she was entitled, as a matter of law, to recover the amount of the policy unless appellant could show that it was not liable because of one of the exceptions mentioned in the policy which relieved it from liability. Its mere failure, therefore, to satisfactorily show the existence of the exception was a failure of its defense, and justified appellee's recovery. (Jones on Law of Evidence, page 379, section 177.) In May on Insurance, section 325, it is said: "When the dead body of the insured is found under such circumstances and with such injuries that the death may have resulted from negligence, accident, or suicide, the presumption is against suicide, as contrary to the general conduct of mankind, a gross moral turpitude, not to be presumed in a sane man; and whether it was from one or the other, if there is any evidence bearing upon the point, is for the jury." (Supreme Lodge, &c. v. Beck, 94 Fed. Rep., 752; Home Benefit Association v. Sargent, 142 U. S., 697; Phillips v. Louisiana Equitable Life Insurance Co., 26 La. A. R., 404.)

Where the evidence is circumstantial alone, and admits of more than one reasonable conclusion, it proves nothing. The court is of opinion that the peremptory instruction was properly refused, and that those given fairly submitted the question at issue.

The following questions of evidence are presented also on the appeal: The coroner, who was a physician, was introduced as a witness, and after detailing the appearance of the body as found by him, was asked by appellant whether, in his opinion, the death of the insured was self-inflicted or not. We hold that the opinion of the witness as to the manner of the death of the insured was not a relevant fact. Expert evidence is not admissible to decide disputed questions of fact, to establish by the opinion of expert witnesses whether the act under investigation occurred in this way or that. That was the exact question to be determined by the jury from all the facts and circumstances. (Jones on Law of Evidence, section 374; Manhattan Life Ins. Co. v. Beard.)

Appellant also offered in evidence a copy of the coroner's inquest, which it argues was relevant as tending to show the cause of the death of the insured. The verdict of the coroner's jury was that the deceased came to his death by suicide. We are of opinion that this was clearly incompetent, and was properly rejected. Another proposition was: Appellant offered the proofs of death made out by appellee, or on her behalf, and submitted to the company under the terms of the policy as a condition precedent to her right to claim payment. We are of opinion that this was not relevant as substantive evidence as to the cause or manner of the insured's death. Had any witness who had testified in the case been one of those who had made the statement in the proofs of death contrary to his testimony, it would have been relevant for the purpose alone of contradicting the witness and as affecting his credibility; but such was not the case; or if the issue had been made in the case that the requisite proofs of death had not been submitted as required by the policy, then of course these documents would have been relevant. They were properly rejected.

Failing to perceive any error in the record the judgment is affirmed, with damages.

---

WHITE, &c. v. IRVINE.

(Filed May 14, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Wills—Trust—Where the testator devised a farm to his son, and in the provision giving same requests that his son, at his death without issue, should give same to his sister, the son could sell same and vest the purchaser with a perfect title without requiring the purchaser to look to the application of the purchase money. The will does not create a precatory trust.

D. J. White for appellants.

R. W. Miller for appellee.

Appeal from Madison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson.

The only question in this case is whether I. Shelby Irvine takes an estate in the land devised to him by his father, David Irvine, which he can sell and pass a good title thereto to the purchaser, so that the purchaser will not be bound to see to the application of the purchase money. In Igo v. Irvine, 24 Ky. Law Rep., 1165, we had under consideration the construction of the same will. The words there construed are as follows: "I make it as a request of my children that if any of them should die without issue, in so far as they may have received any estate from me, at their death they will the same to my surviving children, or the issue of those that may be dead. I think this is but a reasonable request, and I have confidence that it will be complied with by my children."

It was held that these words did not create a precatory trust, and that the children took an absolute estate in the property devised to them. The case now before us turns on a different provision of the will, which is in these words: "I will and bequeath to my son, I Shelby Irvine, 305 acres of land lying and being in Madison county, Kentucky, on the Richmond and Lexington Turnpike Road, lying south and adjoining the sixty four acres herein willed to my daughter, Sarah I. White, and being all the land conveyed to me by John Newland, except sixty-four acres hereafter willed to my son, David W. Irvine, and more fully described in that bequest to him. I make it as an earnest request of my said son, I. Shelby Irvine, that if he should die without having issue, that he give said 805 acres of land, or its value, to my daughter, Sarah I. White, if living; if not, then to her children. If any of her children should be dead having issue, in that event said issue is to receive one equal share."

It will be observed that the testator makes it an earnest request of the devisee that if he should die without having issue he should give the 805 acres of land, or its value, to his sister, Sarah I. White, if living; or if dead, to her children. The language of the testator is not as strong as that heretofore construed by this court and held not to create a precatory trust in the land, because the request is that the devisee give the land or its value, which recognizes the right in the devisee to dispose of the land if he sees proper. Besides, from an inspection of the entire will, it is evident that the testator's leading purpose was to place all his four children upon equality, and we are satisfied that the request made of I. Shelby Irvine was not intended to impose upon him any greater restriction as to selling the land than was imposed upon the other children by the words of the will relating to them, heretofore construed.

Judgment affirmed.

---

JONES v. WALTER, &c.

(Filed May 14, 1903.)

Injunction—Execution—Bankruptcy—Appellant filed this action to enjoin an execution issued against him on a debt which he claims he was released from by a discharge in bankruptcy; that said claim was provable in bankruptcy, but was not scheduled in time for proof and allowance for the reason that he did not at the time of making out his schedule in bankruptcy remember its existence, but that the appellee, the creditor, had notice or actual knowledge of the bankruptcy proceeding. A demurrer was sustained to the petition and the petition dismissed, from which this appeal is prosecuted. Held—That in addition to notice required by the statute to be given creditors, section 17 of the act evidently contemplates that the creditor may have actual knowledge of the proceedings in bankruptcy derived from other sources than either of the modes pointed out in the statute. Actual knowledge of the claim in time to have asserted it in the bankruptcy proceedings will bar any proceedings to collect it after the discharge.

John G. Winn for appellant.

Lewis Apperson for appellees.

Appeal from Montgomery Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Burnam.

This action was brought by the appellant, John W. Jones, against the appellees, Edmond Walter, &c., to enjoin the collection of an execution which had issued against him in favor of the appellees upon a judgment for $319.49, with interest from the 17th day of December, 1889, in the name of Albert Berger & Co., of which firm appellees are now the sole surviving partners, upon the ground that he had on the — day of January, 1900, been duly adjudged a bankrupt, and released from all debts provable in bankruptcy existing on that day, from which he could be discharged and which included the debt of the defendants; and that the discharge had been granted to him by the district court of the United States for the District of Kentucky; and that his discharge had never been revoked or set aside, but was still alive and in full force; that the debt evidenced by the judgment was for merchandise sold and delivered to him by the defendants and was provable in bankruptcy; that the defendant's debt was not duly scheduled in time for proof and allowance with the name of the creditor for the reason that he did not at the time of making out his schedule in bankruptcy remember its existence, but that the defendant, Edmond Walter and Alphonse Walter, who are now claiming the right to collect said judgment, had notice or actual knowledge of the proceedings in bankruptcy, in course of which his discharge was granted, and prays for a perpetual injunction against further proceedings looking to the collection of the debt.

The defendants filed a general demurrer to plaintiff's petition, which was sustained, and plaintiff declining to plead further, his petition was dismissed, and he has appealed. The sole question for decision is the sufficiency of the petition. So much of section 17 of the National Bankruptcy Act of 1898 as is important for us to consider in the determination of this question reads as follows: "A discharge in bankruptcy shall release a bankrupt from all of his provable debts except * * * (3) have not been scheduled in time for proof and allowance, with the name of the creditor, if known to the bankrupt, unless such creditor had notice or actual knowledge of the proceedings in bankruptcy."

It is conceded that defendant's debt was provable against the bankrupt estate, and plaintiff admits that it was not scheduled in time for proof and allowance, with the name of the creditor. It, therefore, follows that his discharge affords no protection against the collection of defendants' debt unless they had notice or actual knowledge of the proceedings in bankruptcy. It was held by the Federal courts that under the bankrupt act of 1867 a discharge was a bar, even though the creditor owning the debt was omitted from the schedule and received no notice of the proceedings, provided such omission was not willful or fraudulent, and the notice required by the statute had been duly published. (Loveland on Bankruptcy, page 624.) But the jurisdiction of the creditor under the present act depends not on the petition and adjudication, but on the facts either that the debt was duly scheduled in time for proof and allowance, or if not, that the creditor had notice or actual knowledge of the proceedings in bankruptcy. There is evidently a difference between the words "notice" and "actual knowledge" of the proceedings in bankruptcy, as used in the statute. Section 58 of the act provides that creditors shall have at least ten days' notice by mail to their addresses as they appear in the list of the creditors of the bankrupt, or as afterwards filed with the paper in the case by the creditors, unless they have waived notice of any right of all examinations of the bankrupt; all hearings upon application for the confirmation of compositions or discharge of bankruptcy; all meetings of creditors; all proposed sales of property, or declarations and time of dividends; the filing of final accounts with the trustee, etc. The notice contemplated by this statute is evidently a written notice by mail. Note B provides that notice to creditors to the first meeting shall be published at least once, and may be published such number of additional times as the court may direct; that all notices shall be given by the referee unless otherwise ordered. The notice contemplated by this section of the statute is a written or printed notice to the creditors. But section 17 evidently contemplates that the creditor may have actual knowledge of the proceedings in bankruptcy derived from other sources than either of the modes pointed out in the statutes. If it be clearly shown that the creditor has actual knowledge of the application for a discharge in bankruptcy by the debtor and the pendency of the proceedings in time to have asserted his claim in the proceedings, no difference how this knowledge may be acquired, it would be an effectual bar to the assertion of his claim against the bankrupt after discharge. Plaintiff's allegation on this point is in the language of the statute and upon demurrer must be taken as true, and, in our opinion, is sufficient to support a cause of action. The chancellor, therefore, erred in sustaining the demurrer thereto.

For reasons indicated the judgment is reversed and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

---

THOMPSON, &c. v. MELTON & CO.

(Filed May 14, 1903—Not to be reported.)

1. Damages—Breach of contract—Instructions—Appellants, through S., their agent, bought of appellee about fifty or sixty hogsheads of filler strips tobacco at the price of 4½ cents per pound, which was guaranteed to be sound and prized in "good English order." Afterwards appellants transferred this contract to C., and an addition was made to the contract, to the effect that appellees guaranteed the weights of the tobacco sold to appellants now sold to C. Forty hogsheads of the tobacco contracted for were delivered to C., who shipped it to Liverpool, England, where it was inspected and claimed not to be sound or prized in "good English condition," and C. was compelled to sell it at a loss of $748.50, to recover which this action was brought and a judgment resulted for defendant, from which this appeal is prosecuted. The defendant denied that the tobacco was unsound, or not prized in good English condition; also that S., as the agent of appellants, had superintended the prizing of same, and C. had an opportunity to inspect same, and approved it. Issue was joined on this defense and appellants contend that appellees, by their agreement of transfer of the purchase to C., made a new contract, and were not bound by the acts of S., as agent of appellants. Held—That there was no new contract made which changed appellee's duty as to the condition of the tobacco prized, and the proof showing that the greater part of the tobacco was prized under the supervision and inspection of S., before the transfer of the contract, the jury were authorized under proper instructions to find the verdict rendered.

2. Evidence—C. can not complain that he was surprised at the testimony that appellants had authorized S. to act for and represent him in looking after the tobacco, as he was apprised by the answer that the tobacco was prized for shipment under direction of appellants, their authorized agents, and employes, and the reply denied this allegation.

R. H. Cunningham for appellants.

S. W. Dixon and A. O. Stanley for appellees.

Appeal from Henderson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Burnam.

On the 5th of June, 1900, the appellants, James P. Thompson & Co., bought of appellees, T. J. Melton & Co., through their agent, G. G. Slaughter, fifty or sixty hogsheads of "filler strips" tobacco, by written contract, which reads as follows: "We have this day sold to J. P. Thompson & Co. our entire lot of trash strips or 'filler strips,' [fifty or sixty hogsheads, for which we agree to take 4½ cents, F. O. B. at Robards or Corydon, at Thompson & Co.'s option which place. We bind ourselves to prize these strips in 'good English order,' and guarantee them sound, and we agree to not ship any before the 1st day of July without the consent of Thompson & Co."

On the 12th day of July, 1900, Thompson & Co. transferred and assigned the benefit of this purchase to the appellants, Clark & Clark, and at the same time the appellee added to the original contract these words: "In addition to the above contract, we agree and bind ourselves to guarantee weights of all the filler strips sold to Thompson & Co., and now sold to Clark & Clark."

Pursuant to this contract appellees delivered to Clark & Clark forty hogsheads of tobacco contracted for at Robards, which weighed 49,900 pounds, and for which appellants paid the contract price of 4½ cents per pound. In due time all of the tobacco was shipped by Clark & Clark to their factors in Liverpool, Eng., for sale, and it is alleged that upon receipt and inspection of the tobacco at Liverpool, on October 1, 1900, that it was not prized in "good English order," but, on the contrary, was moist, damp and mouldy; and that in consequence of the tobacco being improperly prized appellants were compelled to sell it at a loss of $748.50. They thereupon instituted this suit to recover damages for the breach of the written contract of guaranty. Appellees, in their answer, deny that the tobacco was not prized in "good English order," as required by their contract; and further allege that the tobacco was prized and prepared for shipment under the direction and supervision of Thompson & Co., their agents and employes; and that Clark & Clark, after their purchase from Thompson & Co., and before the shipment of the tobacco, inspected it and approved of its condition, and the balance of the tobacco which had not already been prized was prized under the direction of Clark & Clark; and that if the tobacco was not prized in good English order, as required by their contract, Thompson & Co. and Clark & Clark were responsible therefor, as it was prized at the time and in obedience to their express direction. Appellants, in their reply, deny that the tobacco was inspected by Thompson & Co., their agents or employes, and that after such inspection it was prized for shipment under the direction of Thompson & Co., their agents or employes; and they further deny that Clark & Clark had any opportunity to inspect the tobacco or know its condition previous to its shipment, or that it was prized under their direction, or that of their agents or employes. A jury trial resulted in a verdict for the defendant, and plaintiffs have appealed. The first and main ground relied on for a reversal is that the court erred in the third instruction given to the jury. The instructions are as follows:

“1st. It was the duty of the defendants, T. J. Melton & Co., to prize the tobacco in question in ‘good English order,’ and sound, and if you believe from the evidence they so prized said tobacco, you will find for the defendants, Melton & Co. But if you believe from the evidence that said Melton & Co. failed to prize said tobacco in good English order, and sound, and the plaintiffs, Clark & Clark, suffered a loss by reason of such failure, you will find for said plaintiffs such amount in damages as will reasonably compensate them for their said loss, not to exceed, however, the sum of $748.50.

“2d. If you find for the plaintiffs, the criterion of their recovery will be the difference in value, at Robards, or the tobacco as it was in fact prized and the value of such tobacco at Robards if it had been prized in ‘good English order,’ and sound. But if at the time of making the contract in question it was agreed, or contemplated, between Gus Slaughter, the agent of Thompson & Son., and the defendants, that said tobacco should be shipped to the English market, and it was to be put up and prized for that purpose, then the criterion of recovery will be the difference in the values aforesaid in the English market instead of at Robards.

“3d. If you believe from the evidence that Gus Slaughter was authorized by the said Thompson & Co. to represent or act for them in looking after the prizing of the tobacco in question, and that said Melton & Co. prized said tobacco, or any portion of same, in such condition or order as was directed, or approved by the said Slaughter, or by the plaintiff, Clark & Clark, after their purchase from Thompson & Co., then as to such of said tobacco so prized you can allow the plaintiffs no damages, even though such tobacco was not prized in ‘good English order,’ and sound.”

It is insisted that the third instruction is erroneous for the reason that Clark & Clark were not bound by any direction or instruction which Slaughter may have given to the appellees as to the prizing of the tobacco prior to the assignment of Thompson & Co.’s contract to them on the 12th of July, 1900. The alleged basis for this contention is that appellees consented to the transfer of the contract from Thompson & Co. to Clark & Clark, and by the addition made by them to the contract guaranteeing the weights of the strips that they had at that time made a new contract, in which they expressly warranted that the tobacco had been prized in “good English order,” and that they were, therefore, bound on this warranty without regard to any previous direction or inspections with reference thereto by Thompson & Co.

The testimony conduces to show that at the date of the original contract with Slaughter seven or eight hogsheads of the tobacco had already been prized, and that at that time appellees showed him the bulk of the tobacco, and represented to him that they thought it was too damp to prize, but that he directed them to lay aside the top and sides of the bulk and go ahead and prize the dry tobacco from the middle; and that about twenty-five hogsheads of the tobacco were prized in this condition under his direction before the transfer of the benefit of the contract of Clark & Clark; that J. W. Clark, a member of the firm of Clark & Clark, came to their warehouse with Slaughter while they were prizing the tobacco and had three hogsheads under screw; that Clark examined the tobacco that was being prized and made no complaint. There was a good deal of conflict in the testimony as to what was meant by the words "in good English order." The testimony for the appellant was to the effect that this meant that the tobacco contained from 10 to 12 per cent. of water, while the witnesses for appellee testified that it meant that the tobacco contained not more than 16 per cent. of water. There is no pretense that any additional consideration passed to appellees from Clark & Clark at the time they succeeded to the contract of Thompson & Co., or that any change was made in the weight of the hogsheads, or that there was any complaint growing out of this addition. We are, therefore, of the opinion that the addition of these words did not materially change the written contract of sale previously entered into between Thompson & Co. and appellees; and that they were bound by any directions as to the prizing of the tobacco which had been previously made by Thompson & Co., or their authorized agent, to the extent that the tobacco was already prized and in hogsheads. It follows, therefore, that the court did not err in admitting testimony as to the directions given by Slaughter to appellees as to the time and manner of prizing the tobacco, and in submitting the question to the jury in the third instruction.

Appellants also insist that they are entitled to a reversal of the judgment on the ground that they were surprised by the admission of testimony that Thompson had authorized Slaughter to act for and represent him in looking after the tobacco, and give directions as to the condition in which it should be prized; that before the trial they had been advised that Slaughter had no authority to give any directions in this matter, and that appellees had never claimed that he had such right; and that consequently they had failed to have Thompson present as a witness, or take his deposition. As the answer of appellees expressly alleged that the tobacco was prized and prepared for shipment under the direction of Thompson & Co., their authorized agents and employes, and this averment was expressly denied in the reply, it is hard to see how plaintiffs were surprised by the introduction of testimony to prove the express allegation. Appellant also contends that the verdict is palpably against the weight of evidence. It is true that several witnesses in Liverpool testify that the hogsheads of tobacco were not prized in "good English order;" but it is also true that several witnesses for the defendant, who claim to have had experience and to know what was meant by the words "good English order," proved that it was prized in that condition. In this conflict of testimony the question was for the jury.

The first instruction treated the contract as an express guaranty, and authorized a recovery if there had been a breach of its covenants by appellant, and it is, therefore, unnecessary for us to follow counsel in their learned discussion as to the respective rights of the vendor and vendee where a breach of warranty was relied on in an action for damages.

It seems to us that there has been a fair trial of this controversy under proper instructions, and that there is no ground for disturbing the verdict of the jury and the judgment rendered pursuant thereto.

WHITNEY v. WHITNEY.

(Filed May 14, 1908.)

Dissolution of partnership—Sale of expirations of insurance—Appellant and appellee were for many years partners, conducting an insurance agency. Upon a dissolution of the partnership a suit for settlement of accounts was filed, and by agreement a special commissioner was appointed to take charge of the partnership effects, including books and accounts, and make a settlement. On motion of appellee the court ordered the special commissioner to sell the office, daily reports, expirations and records as assets of the firm, from which this appeal is prosecuted. Held—That the list of expirations is not an asset of the firm which is capable of sale. This is not a sale of the good will of the firm, but the sale merely of the information shown by the books. The court could not prevent any member from soliciting business from their former patrons. The business agency, as a whole, including the good will of the firm, leasehold of the office, furniture and books and along with it the information sought to be sold in the order complained of, could be sold as a whole.

Byrne & Read for appellant.

B. F. Graziani for appellee.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

John Whitney and H. A. Whitney, as partners, for many years conducted an insurance agency under the firm name of John Whitney & Co., in Covington, Ky. For reasons satisfactory to themselves they dissolved the partnership, and each instituted an action in the Kenton Circuit Court against the other for a settlement of the partnership affairs. Subsequently these two actions were consolidated, and by agreement an order was entered whereby George M. Keifer was appointed special commissioner in the consolidated actions, with the following powers and directions concerning the partnership assets: "The said special commissioner will forthwith take possession of the office, furniture and fixtures of the firm of John Whitney & Co. He will take possession of the office of said firm and retain possession of said office until further orders. He will take possession of the horse, buggy and harness belonging to said firm, and will sell said horse, buggy and harness at private or public sale, for cash or on credit, as may seem best to him. He will take possession of all the books, accounts and papers of said firm, and will allow the parties hereto to inspect said books at reasonable times and at his convenience. He will take and retain possession of all other properties and assets of said firm. The said firm has funds on deposit at the Farmers and Traders National Bank, and at the Citizens National Bank, Covington, Ky. The said commissioner will take possession of these funds, and the said banks will pay same to him, and this order shall be their warrant for so doing. Said commissioner will proceed to collect all debts and accounts due and become due to said firm. These causes are now referred to said special commissioner. He will ascertain and report the assets and liabilities of the firm; the state of the accounts of said firm and each of the members thereof, and the amount due to each member of said firm from the net assets of said firm. He will fully settle all accounts and affairs of the partnership. This order and each, and every particular of the same, is agreed to by the parties, and is entered with their consent and on their motion."

After the entry of this order George M. Keifer executed bond as special commissioner, and took possession of the partnership assets of the firm of John Whitney & Co. On the 20th day of March, 1902, the following motion was made: "Now comes the plaintiff, H. A. Whitney, and the defendant in suit No. 5,985, of John Whitney, and moves the court for an immediate order of sale of the office, daily reports, expirations and records of same of John Whitney & Co."

This motion having been submitted to the court on the 14th day of April, 1902, the following judgment was rendered: "The office expirations of the firm of John Whitney & Co. constitute an asset of the firm; John Whitney and H. A. Whitney have an equal interest therein. A motion for an order of sale of these expirations is sustained, and the order of sale thereof will be entered."

In pursuance of this judgment, on the 18th day of April, 1902, the office expirations of the firm of John Whitney & Co. were ordered to be sold by the special commissioner, at public sale, upon the terms and conditions set forth in the order; to all of which John Whitney excepted and prayed an appeal. The office expirations, directed to be sold by the special commissioner, are no more or less than a list of the names of the customers of the firm of John Whitney & Co. who have insured property through the agency of the firm, with the date of expiration of the policy of each customer. It is not pretended that the firm, or any member thereof, has any beneficial interest, or property right, in the contracts of insurance held by these customers. They have no control over the policies, nor any right to demand that they shall be renewed at the date of their expiration; nor have they any power or authority to demand that the insurance company issuing the policies shall renew them at the date of expiration. These expirations, then, which the order of the court seeks to sell, amount to no more than information as to what the firm has done in the past; the court can neither guarantee nor convey any right with regard to it; it can neither require the patrons to renew their policies nor the insurance companies to accept the business, should the patrons desire to renew. All that the purchaser of this list of names and dates could possibly secure would be the opportunity to solicit business from the old customers of the dissolved firm.

We do not think that this list of names and dates amounts to an asset of the firm which is capable of sale. The court could not prevent either member of the firm from soliciting business from their former patrons. It seems to us that the members of the dissolved firm have equal right to possession of the list of expirations, as well as equal right and opportunity to solicit the patronage of their former customers. This is not the sale of the good will of the firm, but the sale, merely, of the information shown by the books. We have been cited to no case which upholds the principle that the list of names of a firm's customers may, upon dissolution, be sold as an asset. We have no doubt that the business agency, as a whole, including the good will of the firm, leasehold of the office, furniture and books, and along with it the information sought to be sold in the order complained of, constitutes an asset which may be sold and conveyed to a purchaser by the court; but to detach the list of names of the firm's customers, with the dates of expiration of their respective policies, and sell it separately, would be the doing of a vain and useless thing.

Wherefore, the judgment is reversed.

---

EDMONDS v. HUGHES.

(Filed May 14, 1903.)

Breach of contract of marriage—Appellant brought this action to recover damages for breach of promise of marriage. In defense appellee pleaded that he made the promise of marriage on condition that appellant would then and there have illicit intercourse with him; that at the time he made the promise he believed appellant to be a virtuous woman, but that since he had discovered that she was immoral and unchaste. He further stated that at the time he promised to marry her she was a woman in full possession of the power of procreation and was able to bear children; that thereafter she voluntarily submitted to and permitted an unnecessary operation to be performed on her body by which she was rendered unable to procreate or bear children, and will forever remain so. Held—That each of said defenses constitute a valid defense to the action, and a judgment in favor of defendant, will not be disturbed.

Perkins & Trimble for appellants.

S. Walton Forgy for appellee.

Appeal from Todd Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

The appellee, Flora Edmonds, instituted this action in the Todd Circuit Court to recover damages of the appellee for a breach of his contract to marry her. The facts stated in the petition constitute a valid cause of action.

Appellee, in his answer, admits his promise to marry appellant, as alleged in the petition, but pleads as a defense, first, that the consideration for the contract was the agreement by appellant to then and there have illicit intercourse with him, and that his promise was made upon no other consideration; second, that at the time the promise was made by him he believed the appellant to be a virtuous woman; that he did not at that time, or prior thereto, know that she was, or had been, an immoral or unchaste woman, or that she had been guilty of lewd or lascivious conduct with other men, but since his promise he has learned, and now charges it to be true, that she was, prior thereto, then and now, unchaste, and that she has been guilty of adultery with other men; third, that at the time he promised to marry her she was a woman in full possession of the power of procreation, and was able to bear children; that after the promise was made she voluntarily submitted to and permitted an unnecessary surgical operation to be performed upon her body, by which she was rendered unable to procreate or bear children, and will forever remain so. Without examining the pleadings minutely it is sufficient to say that the issues were made upon these three defenses of appellee.

In Beach on the Modern Law of Contracts, section 1553, it is said: "A contract made in consideration of future illicit sexual intercourse is void, and the woman can not recover under such contract, although it has been performed on her part."

In Parsons on Contracts, star page 68, the rule is thus stated: "But it would seem, on general principles, to be a good defense (to an action for breach of promise to marry) that the promise was made on condition that the plaintiff would commit fornication with the defendant; for such a promise might be void as founded upon an illegal consideration."

In Baldy v. Stratton, 11 Pa. St., 306, the court say: "A promise to marry on condition of illicit intercourse is illegal, and a consideration that will not support a promise; a promise to marry, on an illegal consideration, is virtually void."

In the case of Judy v. Sterrett, 52 Ill. App., 265, it was held that "a promise of marriage in consideration of illicit sexual intercourse is void."

In the case of Hanks v. Neglee, 54 Cal., 52, it is said: "Upon well-settled principles, the plaintiff should not have recovered upon a contract of this character (to marry) as, being a contract for illicit cohabitation, it is tainted with immorality. * * * It was confessedly not a case in which the defendant, taking advantage of the trust and confidence which may be fairly supposed to exist between parties who have in apparent good faith made mutual promises of marriage, has abused the confidence of the female and induced her to yield him favors which she might have otherwise withheld. The agreement to yield her person to him was one appearing to have been deliberately made in advance, and when there had been no promise of marriage."

In Addison on Contracts, volume 2, star pages 838-839, it is said: "If subsequent to the making of the contract to marry one of the parties, being bodily diseased, becomes unfit for the performance of the most important duty of marriage, the party so unfit is not thereby entitled to treat the contract as dissolved, the other party still desiring its performance; but the latter may break off the engagement, for, if a man, by disease, accident or mutilation, becomes impotent, he can never maintain an action against a lady for refusing to marry him."

In the case of Berry v. Bakeman, 44 Me., 164, it is said: "Proof that the plaintiff is a loose and immodest woman, and that the defendant broke his promise on that account, is a bar to the action, unless it should also appear that the defendant was aware of this when he made the promise, in which case it is no defense."

In Addison on Contracts, volume 2, star pages 838-839, it is said: "If the woman, at the time of her betrothment, was of loose and immodest character, and this was unknown at the time to the man who promised to marry her, the latter is entitled, as soon as he discovers her real character, to break off the engagement. General reputation of want of chastity must be established in such actions; or, if particular instances of misconduct are relied upon, they must be fully proved. If the circumstances, whatever they may be, were known to the other contracting party, there is then no fraud or deceit in the matter, and he has no ground for refusing to complete his engagement." * * *

In Parsons on Contracts, volume 2, star page 65, in enumerating the defenses to action of breach of promise to marry, it is said: "So the bad character of the plaintiff, or his or her lascivious conduct. The cases generally exhibit this defense where the woman is plaintiff; but it ought with equal justice, and on moral as well as on public grounds, to be permitted to the woman when she is defendant. It was so held in the case of Braddeley v. Mortlock, and undoubtedly would be so held in this country. If the defense be general bad character, evidence of reputation is receivable; for, says Lord Kenyon, 'character is the only point in issue; public opinion, founded on the conduct of the party, is a fair subject of inquiry.' If the defense rests on specific allegations of misconduct, these must be strictly proved; and if the defendant knew the general bad character, or the specific misconduct, before making the promise, they constitute no defense."

We conclude, then, from these authorities, that each of the three defenses set up by the appellee in his answer, if true, constituted a valid bar to the cause of action contained in the petition. These principles of law were all fairly presented to the jury in the instructions, which, after a careful examination, we think were as liberal to the appellant's interest as she was entitled, and that the evidence justified the verdict rendered by the jury.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

---

MERCER'S TRUSTEE v. MERCER, &c.

(Filed May 14, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Fraudulent conveyances—M. borrowed $500 from D. and executed to him a note therefor, in which he stipulated that in case he failed to pay same at maturity he would convey to D. one-fourth interest in a tract of land. Some time after maturity of the note M. filed his petition in bankruptcy, but a few days before doing so he conveyed said land to D. This action was instituted by his trustee to set aside said conveyance with a view to subjecting same to M.'s debts. It being alleged that this conveyance having been made within four months before he filed his petition in bankruptcy, was in fraud of his creditors. Held—That the transaction was genuine and in good faith, and was but a compliance with the agreement entered into when the note was executed. The paper was valid as a title bond or mortgage, and his creditors can not complain because he executed the conveyance pursuant to same.

Jonson & Wickliffe and Arthur Y. Martin for appellant.

R. Y. Thomas for appellee and cross appellant.

Appeal from Muhlenberg Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The appellee, Mercer, sought to be discharged in bankruptcy, and appellant, A. Y. Martin, was appointed trustee. Within a few days before the petition was filed in bankruptcy Mercer conveyed certain land in Muhlenberg county to appellee, S. H. Danks. This suit was instituted to set aside the conveyance with a view to subjecting the land to the payment of Mercer's creditors. It is sought to be set aside upon the ground that it was made within four months before he filed his petition in bankruptcy, with the intent and purpose to hinder, delay and defraud his creditors, etc. On July 5, 1898, Danks loaned Mercer $500, and for which a note bearing that date was executed, which reads as follows:

"One year after date I promise to pay to S. H. Danks the sum of $500 for cash received.

"I further promise in case of failure to pay said amount when due to give said S. H. Danks a deed for my one-fourth interest in Mercer & Co. property located at Mercer, Ky., in Muhlenberg county, on I. C. R. R., between Dovey Mines and Hillside Mines.

"A. E. MERCER."

Mercer failed to pay the note and interest. In July, 1890, he expressed a desire that Danks should take the land according to the contract for the amount of the debt and interest. They went upon the land and looked over it, whereupon Danks agreed to take it. However, a deed was not made until the 17th of the following December, when it was tendered to and accepted by Danks.

The court is convinced that the transaction was genuine, and in the utmost good faith. The writing which Mercer executed required him to convey this property to Danks in the event he failed to pay the money. As between the parties, the provision in the note with reference to the conveyance of the property was enforceable, either as a title bond or as a mortgage upon the land to secure the payment of the debt and interest. If it only created a lien upon the land, he had the right to convey the property for a fair cash value in payment of the debt, and in doing which it did not operate to defraud his creditors.

Section 67, subsection E of the bankrupt act of 1898, reads as follows: "That all conveyances, transfers, assignments, or incumbrances of his property, or any part thereof, made or given by a person adjudged a bankrupt under the provisions of this act subsequent to the passage of this act, and within four months prior to the filing of the petition, with the intent and purpose on his part to hinder, delay or defraud his creditors, or any of them, shall be null and void as against the creditors of such debtor, except as to purchasers in good faith and for a present fair consideration; and all property of the debtor conveyed, transferred, assigned or incumbered as aforesaid shall, if he be adjudged a bankrupt, and the same is not exempt from execution and liability for debts by the law of his domicil, be, and remain, a part of the assets and estate of the bankrupt and shall pass to his said trustee, whose duty it shall be to recover and reclaim the same by legal proceedings, or otherwise, for the benefit of the creditors. And all conveyances, transfers or incumbrances of his property made by a debtor at any time within four months prior to the filing of the petition against him, and while insolvent, which are held null and void as against the creditors of such debtor by the laws of the State, Territory or District in which said property is situate, shall be deemed null and void under this act against the creditors of such debtor if he be adjudged a bankrupt, and such property shall pass to the assignee and be by him reclaimed and recovered for the benefit of the creditors of the bankrupt."

Under this act, if the land was purchased in good faith and for present fair consideration, the transaction is valid. At the time the note was executed Mercer was not insolvent, and the money was not borrowed in contemplation of insolvency. The deed was the completion of a contract previously made. It certainly was not a fraud upon the rights of the creditors to do that which the court would have required him to do in a proceeding to enforce the lien upon the property. The rights of the creditors could only have been affected if the property was of greater value than the amount of the debt and interest. The proof does not make it clear that the appellee sold the land for less than its actual value, and the sale and conveyance was valid. The court below erred in setting aside the deed and in giving a lien upon the land for Danks' debt and interest.

The judgment is affirmed on the original and reversed on cross appeal, with the direction to dismiss the petition and for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

---

CURRIE FERTILIZER CO. v. KRISH.

(Filed May 15, 1903—Not to be reported.)

1. Damages for breach of contract—Process—Jurisdiction—Appellee made a contract to act as agent of appellant in selling fertilizer of its manufacture in Jericho and its vicinity for one year commencing February, 1901. His compensation was to be the profits he would realize from sales he would make, being the difference between the purchase price and the price received from his customers. After advertising the fertilizer for several months and making sales to sundry parties, appellant, after filling only a part of his orders, withdrew the agency from him, and failed to furnish him with fertilizers to fill the greater part of the orders he had received, and prevented him from receiving further orders and realizing a profit on same. He instituted this action to recover damages for said breach of contract and recovered $210, from which this appeal is prosecuted. Motion was made to quash the process on the ground that it was served on J., who was not an officer or agent of appellant, while he was attending court at New Castle as a witness for appellant in another case. It is further contended that service on him was improper as he was exempt from service by section 542, Civil Code of Practice, as he was attending court as a witness. Held—That as the lower court after hearing evidence decided that J. was appellant's agent, this court will not disturb that finding. J. was not exempt from the service of process under the section of the Code as he was not the "party" sued, nor was attending as a witness "in obedience to a subpoena." Furthermore, this court has adopted the rule that after a motion to quash process has been improperly overruled and an answer filed to the merits, it will be treated as an appearance in this court and in the lower court on the return of the case. Appellant contends that the Henry Circuit Court had no jurisdiction as the contract was made in Jefferson county, and partially performed there, and under section 72, Civil Code, the suit should have been brought in said county. Held—That as the petition does not disclose that the contract was made in Jefferson county, this objection can not be raised by demurrer. On the other hand, the proof shows that the contract was made in Henry county.

2. Pleading—It would have been proper for the lower court to have required plaintiff to have made his petition more specific by stating the names of parties to whom he made sales, but its failure to so rule was not prejudicial to defendant.

3. Pleading—Instructions—The petition claimed damages on the proper basis, and the instructions properly defined the measure of damages recoverable. The quantity of fertilizers which appellee could, and doubtless would, have sold and the profits he would manifestly have made but for the withdrawal of appellant from the contract has been fairly approximated and fixed by the evidence, and they are such as must have been contemplated by the parties in making the contract.

4. Evidence—It was not error to refuse to permit an agent at New Castle to testify to the amount of profits he realized from making sales of the same fertilizer during the same year. What profits were realized in one community is no criterion by which to fix the profits in another community in the absence of proof showing the existence of similar conditions in the two communities.

Grubbs & Grubbs, W. D. Crabb and H. K. Bourne for appellant.

Moody & Gordon for appellee.

Appeal from Henry Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

This action was instituted in the Henry Circuit Court by appellee to recover of the appellant damages for an alleged violation of contract. The petition sets out in substance the following cause of action: That appellant, a corporation engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling fertilizers, by contract of February 4, 1901, employed appellee to act for it as its agent at Jericho, Ky., for one year from that date, in selling its fertilizers, and agreed to furnish him fertilizers at certain agreed prices to fill all orders he might get, or sales he could make during the year in the country around him, appellee to be compensated for his services as such agent by receiving all moneys realized for the fertilizers sold by him over and above the agreed price at which the orders were to be filled by appellant; that pursuant to this contract he proceeded to advertise appellant's fertilizers, and succeeded in making numerous sales thereof, but that appellant, after filling only a part of the orders for the sales made by appellee, in August, 1901, without fault on appellee's part, withdrew its agency from him, and failed to furnish him with fertilizers to fill the greater part of the orders he had received, and prevented him from receiving orders and making other and numerous sales, which he would have done, and was about to do, but for the act of appellant in withdrawing from the contract; and further, that by the loss of his commissions on the orders appellant refused to fill, and on the sales he would have made during the remainder of the year, he was damaged in the sum of $210, for which sum he prayed judgment against appellant.

Appellant, after entering motions to quash the summons and to require the petition to be made more specific, and filing general and special demurrers thereto, which motion and demurrers were each and all overruled by the court, filed answer, the first paragraph of which contained a traverse of the material averments of the petition. In the second paragraph of the answer it is alleged that appellant only agreed with appellee to furnish him quotations upon its various brands of fertilizers, but that the quotations were not for one year, or for any specified time, but were merely quotations at will, or subject to be withdrawn at its pleasure; that on August 2, 1901, before the opening of the fall trade and before it had received any fall orders from appellee, it withdrew its quotations, and so notified him in writing.

August 2, in acknowledging the receipt of which appellee informed the appellant that he had sold some goods, whereupon appellant offered to fill any orders received by appellee before its withdrawal of the quotations, but that he failed to furnish or send in such orders, and so they were not filled.

Reply was filed to the answer controverting its material averments, and upon the issues thus formed the case went to trial before a jury, with the result that appellee received a verdict and judgment for the full amount sued for. Appellant then filed motion and grounds for a new trial, which was refused by the lower court, and this appeal presents the case to this court for final adjudication. The grounds urged for reversal are: First, that the lower court erred in overruling the motion to quash the summons; second, that it erred in overruling the special demurrer to the petition; third, that it likewise erred in refusing to require the petition to be made more specific; fourth, that it also erred in overruling the general demurrer to the petition; and, fifth, that it further erred in instructing the jury.

As to the first ground of alleged error, it appears that the summons was served on one John M. Jenson, who is named in the sheriff's return on the summons as the chief officer of appellant found in Henry county. Jenson, at the time of the service of the summons upon him, was in New Castle attending the quarterly court as a witness for appellant in a suit then upon trial between it and one Mitchell. It is contended for appellant that Jenson was not its officer or agent, and consequently that the service of the summons upon him in this action was void. The lower court upon the proof introduced on that point found that he was an officer of appellant upon whom the service of summons was proper, and we are not disposed to disagree with that finding, or to say that it is not sustained by the evidence.

It is further contended that the service of summons upon Jenson did not have the effect to bring appellant before the court, because he, at the time of such service, was exempt therefrom for the alleged reason that he was a resident of Jefferson county, and was in Henry county and in attendance upon the quarterly court as a witness. Section 542, Civil Code, provides that "a witness shall not be liable to be sued in a county in which he does not reside by being served with a summons in such county while going and returning, or attending, in obedience to a subpoena." We are of opinion that the privilege claimed for Jenson can not be successfully asserted by virtue of the section supra, as he is not the party sued, but only the officer or agent of that party, and consequently was served with summons as such officer or agent. Furthermore, it does not appear from the record that a subpoena was issued or served upon him as a witness in the quarterly court, therefore, his presence there as a witness was voluntary, and not in obedience to a subpoena. The privilege accorded by the Code is for the benefit of a witness who is sued in a county in which he does not reside while there in obedience to a subpoena.

In addition to what has been said in approval of the action of the lower court in overruling the motion to quash the summons, it may be remarked that this court has held that where a motion is made in the lower court to quash a summons upon the ground that it was served upon the wrong person, or one of whose person the court did not thereby acquire jurisdiction, and such motion is overruled by that court, the filing of an answer to the merits and an appeal of the case to this court by the party aggrieved has the effect to enter his appearance to the action in this court, and in the court below upon the return of the case thereto, although the judgment of the latter court in refusing to quash the summons may have been erroneous. L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Chestnut, &c., 24 Ky. Law Rep., 1846, and cases therein cited.)

The second contention of appellant is that the lower court erred in overruling its special demurrer to the petition. The demurrer in question is to the jurisdiction of the court, for it is argued by counsel for appellant that the lower court had no jurisdiction of the appellant, or of the subject-matter of the action, for the alleged reason that the contract between appellee and appellant, out of the alleged violation of which this action arose, was made in Jefferson county, and was to be performed in that county as well, and that under the provisions of section 72, Civil Code, the action should have been brought in Jefferson county, and that only the circuit court of that county had jurisdiction of the case. It is sufficient to say in response to this contention that it is not disclosed by the petition that the contract out of which this action grew was made, or to be performed in Jefferson county, consequently the alleged want of jurisdiction could not be reached by demurrer. Upon the other hand, the proof shows that the contract was made at Jericho, by appellee with J. A. Logan, traveling agent of appellant, and that the former was to sell the appellant's fertilizers in the community surrounding Jericho and contiguous territory.

Appellant's third ground of complaint is that the court erred in overruling its motion to require appellee to make his petition more specific, by giving the names of persons to whom sales of fertilizers were alleged to have been made, and the date and amount of each sale. It would not have been improper for the court to have sustained the motion, for though the appellee may not have been able to set forth the date of each sale, he ought to have been able to give the name of each person to whom he made a sale. But we are unable to say that the failure of the lower court to require a more specific statement of the appellee in his petition upon these matters was prejudicial to appellant, for after all they were facts necessary to be proved in evidence, and were so proved by appellee in making good his claim to damages by reason of appellant's violation of the contract.

The main complaint of appellant's counsel is as to the overruling of its general demurrer by the lower court. We find from the language of the demurrer that it goes to only so much of the petition as seeks the recovery of damages for the loss of profits on sales which appellee avers he could and would have made but for appellant's withdrawal from the contract. The ground of the demurrer is that the damages claimed are remote and altogether speculative.

"Damages which are the natural and proximate consequence of the act complained of may undoubtedly be recovered. So with damages that can be readily determined, and are such as may reasonably be inferred to have been contemplated by the parties. Profits which are the direct and immediate fruits of the contract alleged to have been violated are part and parcel of the contract itself, and must have been in the contemplation of the parties when the agreement was entered into." (E. & P. R. R. Co. v. Pottinger, &c., 10 Bush, 188.)

In Smith & Nixon v. Perry, 13 Ky. Law Rep., 683, the appellants, who were wholesale piano dealers, made appellee, a retail dealer, their agent to sell pianos. The contract between them was violated by the appellants, for which they were sued by the appellee in damages. This case in point of fact is almost identical with the one at bar, the only difference being in the character of the property involved; in this case it is fertilizer, in that pianos. The opinion in Smith & Nixon v. Perry was written by Judge Barbour, of the Superior Court, in which it is said that "where one party to a contract has deprived the other of the gains and profits of the contract by refusing to perform it, this loss constitutes a proper item in estimating the damages. When it is certain the damages have been caused by a breach of the contract, and the only uncertainty is as to the amount, there is no reason for refusing, on account of such uncertainty, any damages whatever. Where the books speak of the profits anticipated from a good bargain as too remote and uncertain to be taken into account in ascertaining the true measure of damages, they have reference to collateral engagements entered into on the faith of the principal contract. * * * Appellants, wholesale dealers in pianos, having entered into a contract with appellee, a retail dealer, by which they made him their agent for the sale of pianos of a certain kind, in the action by appellee to recover damages for a breach of the contract the measure of damages is the appellee's share of the profits upon the number of pianos which he could have sold by reasonable efforts at the prices agreed upon."

In the case at bar the evidence tends to show that appellant made appellee its agent to sell during the year 1901 certain brands of its fertilizers; for his services he was to have all the moneys realized by him from sales over and above the prices fixed by appellant upon the fertilizers furnished on appellee's orders. The latter spent time and labor in advertising appellant's brands, which were popular and salable; his profits depended on the sales made by him during the existence of the agency, that is, the time fixed by the contract, which was one year. The fall of the year, wheat sowing time, the most profitable season for the sale of fertilizers, was still before appellee when his appointment as appellant's agent was revoked without previous notice, and as the letters of its chief officer found in the record show, without apparent reason or excuse.

The quantity of fertilizers which appellee could, and doubtless would, have sold, and the profits he would manifestly have made but for the withdrawal of appellant from the contract, have, we think, been fairly approximated and fixed by the evidence, and they are such as must have been contemplated by the parties in making the contract; besides, appellee testified, in which he was uncontradicted, that after the repudiation of the contract by appellant, he was unable to make arrangements with other dealers in fertilizers to obtain goods with which to fill orders and make further sales because their contracts with agents had all been made the first of the year, and other fertilizers would not have supplied the demand for, or take the place of, the particular brands manufactured by appellant, which appellee had already spent much of his time in advertising, and which were more popular than any other fertilizers sold in his territory. So it seems reasonably apparent that it was out of appellee's power to have procured or substituted other fertillizers for those agreed to be furnished him by appellant, and we conclude, therefore, that the jury were authorized from the evidence to find that appellee had such a contract with appellant as he claims was made between them, and that he was damaged by the act of appellant in discharging him as its agent probably to the extent fixed by the verdict; at any rate, we can not say that there was no evidence to support the verdict.

We can not agree with counsel for appellant that the lower court erred in giving to the jury instruction No. 1. It presented the law of the case as herein declared in language that could not mislead or confuse the jury. Nor do we think it was improper for the court to exclude the testimony of H. S. Ellis, offered by appellant, to the effect that he was the agent of appellant at New Castle, and what profit was made by him upon sales of appellant's fertilizers there. New Castle is four miles from the railroad, and not in the same community with Jericho, and the profits realized at one of these places on such goods were not shown by the evidence to be the same as are customary at the other. No effort was made to prove by Ellis, or any one, that the conditions at New Castle with reference to the sale of fertilizers were similar to those that existed at Jericho.

Finding no error in the record that we regard prejudicial to the appellant, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

---

FALLER, &c. v. TOWN OF LATONIA, &c.

(Filed May 15, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Street improvement—Injunction—This action was instituted by appellants to enjoin the city of Latonia from extending Southern avenue sixty feet in width, passing the appellants' property and taking a strip off their lot thirty by seventy-three feet. The lower court denied the relief sought, from which this appeal is prosecuted. Held—That the appellants failed to show themselves entitled to the injunction.

Dan Thew Wright for appellants.

Orlando P. Schmidt for appellees.

Appeal from Kenton Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

This is a proceeding to enjoin appellees from extending Southern avenue, in the town of Latonia, sixty feet in width, passing the property of appellants, and, as they claim, taking a strip off their lot thirty by seventy-three feet. The record is a large one, and twelve plats filed, covering South Covington, Jones' addition, Mills' addition, Williams' addition, and parts of each and Southern avenue, and many depositions taken by the parties. The manner of preparing the case, and the numerous maps or plats and parts of same on file and the apparent defects in some of them, have had a tendency to confuse rather than enlighten or aid the court in coming to a right conclusion in the case.

In the year 1841 General Taylor conveyed to his daughter, Jane Williamson, over 300 acres of land, the southern boundary line of which is in dispute, that is, that part of the line passing in front of the property of appellants.

Before this deed was recorded General Taylor conveyed sixty-three acres of the same land he had conveyed to his daughter to her husband, George T. Williamson, and he layed out this tract of land into streets and lots; had it platted and recorded as an addition to the town, and in doing so, as appears from his plat, he made Southern avenue a sixty-foot street along by his property, and, as appears on the plat, extended it sixty feet along by his wife's land, in which appellant's lot is situated, but did not open it nearer than two or three hundred feet of the place. Where appellant's property is now situated, according to appellant's contention, there would be an offset of thirty feet in Southern avenue, about 300 feet west of their property on George street.

George T. Williamson layed off his addition in 1849, and extended Southern avenue sixty feet wide to George street, and in 1854 he and his wife made a deed of ten acres of land to one Le Boutillier. On this piece of land is situated the lot of appellants. Le Boutillier conveyed it to Mills with the same reservations, and Mills layed it off into streets and lots and made an addition to the town.

The trouble between these parties has grown out of the meaning of these words in the deeds: "Thence on a line parallel to the southern boundary aforesaid, and fifteen feet northwardly therefrom and with the center of a thirty-foot wide road, lying north of the southern boundary aforesaid, laid out and hereby reserved."

Appellants contend that this "thirty-foot wide road" referred to is the old traveled road thirty feet further south from their lots, in other words, they claim the true southern boundary called for in the Williamson deeds gives them the thirty feet in controversy, and is still thirty feet further south of their property, which includes the old thirty-foot road, and if they give the thirty feet in controversy, then the whole sixty-foot avenue will be on the Jane and George Williamson land. Appellees contend that the old thirty-foot road was not on the Taylor-Williamson land, but was on the land adjoining it, and that the reservation and dedication mentioned in the deeds was, and is, a thirty-foot strip lying just north and parallel with this old road, and that this strip includes the strip of land in controversy. Each of the parties have abundant testimony to support their claims. It is sufficient to say that the lower court was not without evidence to support its findings. Three or four witnesses state that the true southern boundary line of Taylor-Williamson land is in the center of Southern avenue. These witnesses are corroborated by the plat of the Williamson addition made before the sale to Le Boutillier, and also by the plat of Charles Mills, the vendee of Le Boutillier, which shows a straight line on the north side of Southern avenue. According to appellant's contention there would be an offset of thirty feet at George street, a short distance west of their property. The plats of record made by appellants' remote vendors, Williamson and Mills, contradict appellant's theory that there is or should be an offset of thirty feet at George street in the north line of Southern avenue. Granting that the evidence shows that the whole width of Southern avenue is on Williamson's and Mills' land, they had the right to dedicate it to public use when they layed out and platted their addition to the town, and appellants have no right to complain as they are the remote vendees of Williamson and Mills, if they (Williamson and Mills), by their acts of dedication, would be estopped from recovering this thirty-foot strip, and from this record we think they would, then we are at a loss to understand how appellants can own and hold it. We deem it unnecessary to refer to other matters of contention in the record and briefs.

Whereupon, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

---

BODLEY, &c. v. FINLEY'S EX'OR, &c.

(Filed May 15, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Street improvements—Dedication—Pleading—Damages—In defense to this action to enforce a lien on appellant's property for the improvement of Floyd street it is urged that the proof does not show a dedication of said street to the public, and that the petition is insufficient. Held—That the proof is sufficient to prove a dedication, [and the petition is sufficient. It is urged that the court erred in refusing to allow a counterclaim for damages for failure to complete the work within the specified time. Held—That the counterclaim was properly refused as appellant had received compensation for said failure to complete the work.

J. B. Baskin, Thos. R. Gordon and F. W. Morancy for appellants.

Lane & Harrison for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

This appeal is from a judgment enforcing a lien on appellant's property for the improvement of Floyd street in the city of Louisville, Ky.

This case has been in this court before and reversed. The opinion is in 28 Ky. Law Rep., 851. The appellants resist the claim of appellees on three grounds: First, that a part of Floyd street, at the point where Magnolia avenue crosses, it has never been dedicated to public use; second, that plaintiffs' petition and amended petition are defective, and do not authorize the judgment; third, that the court erred in disregarding his offset and counterclaim. In the opinion referred to the court said: "It would seem that the chancellor was misled into treating Ross' testimony as in the record after the exception had been sustained. Upon the return of the case appellees should, under the circumstances, be permitted to amend their petition, and also to make further preparation upon the question of dedication. If a part of the street was not, in fact, dedicated, no lien can arise against the abutting property for the cost of the improvement of that part."

It appears, or is rather indicated from this language of the court in that opinion, that if the testimony of C. C. Roe had been properly in the record the court would have considered the evidence to be sufficient to establish a dedication of the whole of Floyd street. After the case was returned to the lower court the appellees filed an amended petition, and took the deposition of Roe and introduced other deeds and plats, evidencing a dedication of the whole street, and it is also shown that the part claimed by the appellees not to have been dedicated is a small parcel that was covered by what was Rothwell street. This court is of the opinion that there is in the record sufficient proof to establish a dedication of Floyd street, and also that appellees' petition and amended petition are sufficient to sustain the judgment of the court.

The court in the opinion referred to said that appellants should be allowed to present their set-offs, but while that case was pending in this court Mr. Gleason, the contractor and assignor of appellee, died, and his executor brought a suit to settle his estate, and in that case appellant, Temple Bodley, appeared and presented his claim for note of $341.40 and $1,089 as the cost of filling and grading a lot, and these claims were allowed him in that case, and have been collected or secured. The appellants now contend that the court should have allowed his counterclaim for unliquidated damages for $5,000, caused by alleged injury to adjacent property, by the delay of Gleason in filling and grading the lot within the time he agreed to perform the work; in other words, appellants' contention is that if Gleason had graded the lot within the six months their adjoining property would then have enhanced in value to the amount claimed. We are of the opinion the lower court did not err in this matter. The appellant, Temple Bodley, had a contract with M. Gleason by which he agreed to fill and grade this lot according to specifications in the contract, and in the event he failed he agreed to pay to Temple Bodley 25 cents per cubic yard of earth necessary to make the fill, and it was agreed that H. P. McDonald should make the calculations and ascertain the cubic yards of earth necessary to make the fill according to contract, which was done. The amount was ascertained to be $1,089, which sum appellant recovered as above stated. In this action appellant is again trying to recover damages for a violation of the same contract. In the contract the parties agreed on the measure of damages, and same have been paid. We are of the opinion that appellant ought not now be allowed in another action to recover again damages for a violation of the same contract, and which damages, according to the pleadings, had accrued before the first action. Appellants have collected the damages, $1,089, with which to fill and grade the lot, and their adjacent lots can receive this enhancement in value and appellants' loss, if any, can only be by reason of delay in the enhancement, which is at most speculative and uncertain.

For these reasons the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

---

THOMPSON v. MILLEN, &c.

(Filed May 15, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Municipal government—Forfeiture of hogs running at large—Under an ordinance of the town of Elkton hogs belonging to appellant were impounded. After advertisement for ten days were adjudged to be forfeited and ordered sold to pay costs adjudged. This action was instituted to recover the value of the hogs sold, it being contended that the proceedings were illegal as they did not comply with the rules prescribed by the Code of Practice. Held—That the ordinance is sufficient as it is a proper police regulation.

S. Walton Forgy for appellant.

W. C. Davis for appellees.

Appeal from Todd Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Burnam.

This action was instituted by the appellant, Grant Thompson, against the defendants, J. M. Millen and the city of Elkton, to recover damages for the seizure and sale of certain hogs, which wandered from his premises into the town of Elkton. The defendants, in their answer, justify the seizure and sale of plaintiff's hogs under the following ordinance of the city of Elkton:

"Section 134. It shall be unlawful for any swine to run at large upon the streets of Elkton. Any person voluntarily permitting his hogs to run at large shall be subject to a fine of not less than $5, nor more than $10, for each offense for each and every hog and pig.

"Section 135. It shall be the duty of the city marshal to take up and impound any hog found running at large, and report the same to the owner thereof and to the city judge, who shall thereupon summon said owner to appear before him at a stated time within ten days thereafter, and show cause why he or she should not be fined.

"Section 136. The marshal shall make diligent efforts to ascertain the name of the owner of the hog or hogs impounded, and if he shall be unable to do so, he shall advertise the impounding of said hogs and a description of same for ten days by written and printed notices posted at the courthouse door, and also published in some newspaper printed in Elkton, warning the owner of the facts and notifying him to appear before the city judge of Elkton and show cause why said hogs should not be forfeited.

"Section 137. If at any time before the sale of the hog or hogs, as herein provided for, the marshal shall ascertain the name of the owner, he shall, before the making of the sale, summon him as above directed. The owner of such hogs shall have the privilege of redeeming them at any time before the sale by paying the cost and expenses up to the time of the redemption.

"Section 138. After the owner has been summoned and warned as above directed, the city judge shall proceed to a trial as to whether such hog or hogs have run at large within the corporate limits as aforesaid, and if it shall so appear, he shall make an order declaring the same forfeited and directing the marshal to sell them at public outcry, having first advertised said sale by written or printed notices for two days preceding the day of sale. He shall be allowed $1 for each hog or pig so impounded, and 12½ cents a day for each for feeding and caring for same. Where several belonging to the same owner are impounded at the same time, he shall receive $1 for one and 25 cents each for the others. The city judge shall be allowed $1 for holding each trial in which a forfeiture is decreed, all the aforesaid sums to be taxed as costs and deducted from the proceeds of the sale, and the balance, if any, shall be paid to the owner thereof. The marshal is authorized to secure a pound in which to confine hogs taken up under this law."

And in the second paragraph of their answer say that plaintiff's hogs were taken charge of by the marshal of the city of Elkton, while running at large in the corporate limits of the city, and impounded; that they were advertised ten days by written notices posted up at the courthouse door in the city of Elkton, and by a notice published in the Todd County Progress for ten days; that at the expiration of ten days the city police court of the town of Elkton declared the hogs forfeited, and directed them to be sold publicly within two days thereafter for cash; that they were sold pursuant to this order, and the proceeds of the sale were used to pay the cost of the proceeding and the expense of keeping the stock while in pound, and tendered the balance of the purchase money to the plaintiff. A demurrer was interposed to this answer and overruled, and appellant declining to plead further, his petition was dismissed. Upon this appeal appellant does not question the right of the city council of the town of Elkton to pass an ordinance which would prevent the hogs of unknown persons from running at large in the town, nor the right to declare such hogs forfeited; but he earnestly insists that the town council had no authority to prescribe a mode of procedure to accomplish this end, which is in conflict with the provisions of the Civil Code. Section 3637 of the Kentucky Statutes, a section of the charters of cities of the fifth class, to which appellee belongs, provides: "The city council of such city shall have power to pass laws, not in conflict with the Constitution of this State, or the United States."

Subsection 7 of the same section of the statute, in referring to the powers of the town council, says: "It shall have the power to do and perform all acts and things necessary and proper to carry out the provisions of this chapter, and to enact and enforce within the limits of such city all other local, police, sanitary regulations as do not conflict with the general laws."

In several cases this court has held that under similar charter provisions that the city council had authority to pass ordinances authorizing the sale of hogs impounded after a judicial determination by some court that they were running at large in violation of such ordinance. (McKee v. McKee, 47 Ky., 433; Varden v. Mount, 78 Ky., 86. In the case of Armstrong v. Brown and Wright v. Clark, &c., 20 Ky. Law Rep., 1766, the question was very fully gone into, and the conclusion reached that ordinances similar to those complained of in this action were valid. In the latter case it was held that five days' notice of sale was sufficient, the ordinances being justified as within the proper exercise of the police power which belongs to municipalities of this character. In the case of Armstrong v. Brown the opinion uses this language: "If the unknown owner was treated as a nonresident and a warning order made for sixty or ninety days, the cost of keeping them would often equal, if not exceed, the value of the property. So, from the very nature of the case, it is necessary, in the interest of the owner and the city, that the property should be sold as early as may be done, giving reasonable opportunity to the owner to be heard, or, as commonly said, 'to have his day in court.'"

And five days' notice was held reasonable and sufficient time to sustain the jurisdiction of the police court and to render a judgment of sale.

These cases are conclusive of the questions raised by appellant, and an elaborate discussion is, therefore, unnecessary.

Judgment affirmed.

---

JONES v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed May 20, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Criminal law—Robbery—Instructions—Appellant was tried and convicted under an indictment for robbery. The facts were that appellant took the money from the pocket of another by stealth, and that immediately discovering his loss he saw the hand of the accused a few inches from his pocket and endeavored to retake the money from accused by force. The court gave an instruction authorizing a conviction for robbery. Held—That said instruction was erroneous and prejudicial as appellant was guilty of larceny if anything, as no force was used until after the commission of the offense, and this was in an effort to regain possession of the property by the person who had lost it.

Julian B. Bourne for appellant.

C. J. Pratt and M. R. Todd for appellee.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

The indictment charges that the appellant * * * "did unlawfully, willfully, feloniously and with force and violence, and by putting in fear one A. B. Tilton, take from his person and presence $10 in United States currency, bank notes, gold and silver coin, commonly known as money, the personal property of said A. B. Tilton, with the felonious intent to permanently deprive the owner thereof and to permanently convert the same to his own use." * * *

On the trial of the case A. B. Tilton, referred to in the indictment, testified that he was in the betting shed of the Kentucky Trotting Association looking at the pool sellers' bulletin; that he had $10 in his vest pocket; that the defendant was standing in front of him with his back to him; that while in that position he felt something touch his breast, he immediately grabbed and looked down, when he saw defendant's hand which he had grabbed was twelve or fourteen inches from witness' vest pocket; that defendant pulled and tried to get away, and slipped the money from his right to his left hand. From the facts proven it is evident that the money was taken from Tilton by stealth. The party was not put in fear, neither was violence used in taking the money. This court, in Commonwealth v. Prewitt, 82 Ky., 240, defined robbery in the language of the common law, which is: "The felonious and forcible taking from the person of another of goods or money to any value, by violence or putting him in fear." This court, in other cases, has recognized this as the proper definition of robbery. No violence was employed in taking the money. It is true that after Tilton discovered that his money had been taken he sought by force, which the defendant resisted, to regain possession of it and prevent his escape. At the time the defendant was seized he had the money in his possession. The asportation was complete. He had the money as much in his possession when his hand was seized as he would have had had more time elapsed and he had succeeded in placing it in his pocket or in the hands of an accomplice. The force used did not accompany the taking of the money, but in resisting an effort to regain possession of it.

In Blackstone's Commentaries, volume 4, page 242, it is said: "This previous violence or putting in fear is a criterion which distinguishes robbery from other larcenies, for if one privately steals sixpence from the person of another and afterwards keeps it by putting him in fear, this is not robbery, for the fear is subsequent."

It is said in Archibold's Criminal Practice, 508: "It may be observed, with respect to the taking, that it must not, as it should seem, precede the violence or putting in fear; or, rather, a subsequent violence or putting in fear will not make a precedent taking, effected clandestinely or without either violence or putting in fear, amount to robbery."

The court below evidently tried the case upon the theory that the resistance by the defendant of the force used by Tilton to regain his money made it a case of robbery instead of larceny, therefore, the court gave the following erroneous instruction: "If the defendant, by stealth merely, got and retained or transferred to the possession of another, money, the property of A. B. Tilton, this was not a taking by force. If the defendant, by stealth, got possession of money, the property of A. B. Tilton, by taking said money from the person of said Tilton, and immediately before said defendant had secured the money to himself or transferred to another said Tilton discovered the taking, and then and there, by the use of physical force, attempted to regain possession of the money while said money was in the possession of the defendant, and the defendant then and there, by the use of physical force, prevented said Tilton from retaking said money, and either retained it himself, or fraudulently transferred it to the possession of another, this was a taking by force."

The fact that force was used by defendant after the money had been taken could not relate back to the act of taking so as to be considered force accompanying that act. The taking of the money was larceny.

The judgment is reversed for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

---

HOME INSURANCE CO. OF N. Y. v. HOLDER.

(Filed May 19, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Insurance—Waiver of forfeiture of policy—This action was brought to recover for a loss under a policy of fire insurance. A policy of fire insurance was executed on January 31, 1898. The premium was $25, $5 of which was paid and four notes for $5 each, payable annually thereafter, were executed. The last installment became due on January 31, 1902, and was unpaid. The loss occurred on February 12, 1902. The company, in defense, insisted that the policy was forfeited for nonpayment of the last premium note. On the trial evidence was introduced showing that an agent of appellant was applied to before the note became due, and that for special reasons then made known to him waived the forfeiture. A verdict and judgment resulted in favor of plaintiff. On appeal, Held—That the verdict will not be disturbed as the evidence was sufficient to authorize the jury to decide that there was a waiver of the forfeiture.

Shelbourne & Kane for appellant.

J. M. Nichols & Son for appellee.

Appeal from Carlisle Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

On January 31, 1898, the appellant executed and delivered to appellee its policy of insurance by which it insured him against loss by fire on his residence, household goods and meathouse in the sum of $500. The premium for this insurance was $25. Appellee paid $5 of this at the time, and executed his note for $20, to be paid in four equal annual installments of $5 each, to be paid on the 1st day of each February following.

Appellee's property was destroyed by fire on the 12th day of February, 1902.

Appellant refused to pay the policy or any part thereof, claiming that the policy was forfeited or lapsed by reason of appellee's failure to pay the last installment of $5, when due on February 1, 1902. The policy contains the following clause: "But it is expressly agreed that this company shall not be liable for any loss or damage that may occur to the property herein mentioned while any installment of the installment note, given for premium upon this policy, remains past due and unpaid."

The facts with reference to the last premium, as appear of record, are as follows, to wit: Some time in the latter part of January, 1902, the appellee received notice from the appellant that his premium would be due February 1, following. The appellee, at that time, had concluded to vacate the premises insured and place his son in the possession thereof as his tenant, and being unable himself to read and write he went to one T. C. Halteman, an insurance agent of Bardwell, but not an agent of appellant company, for information. Halteman advised him not to send the premium to the appellant at that time; that it would be necessary for him to get a tenant's permit from appellant, and that that would cost him something in addition to the premium; that he would, for appellee, write appellant's agent at Clinton, Ky., for the permit, and when he received it, and ascertained the cost of it, he could send the amount with the premium. Halteman then wrote for appellee the following letter:

"Bardwell, Ky., January 31, 1902.

"Mr. Porter, Clinton, Ky.:

"Dear Sir—I am going to move out of my house in a few days; I am carrying insurance in your company and I want you to give me a permit for my son to occupy the building. The premium will be due February 1, and just as soon as I receive the permit I will pay the premium.

"Yours truly,

(Signed) "JOHN HOLDER."

Porter forwarded this letter to the Western home office of appellant at Chicago. The superintendent there wrote a letter stating, in substance, that they would issue the permit when the premium was paid, and also notified appellee that his policy had lapsed by reason of the nonpayment of the premium. This letter was written February 5, and addressed to "John H. Holden," instead of to "John Holder," and appellee never received it. The agent of appellant, Mr. Porter, at Clinton, Ky., was in Bardwell about the 2d of February, and stated to the agent of the appellee, Mr. Halteman, that he had received the letter, copied above, and that he had forwarded it to the company, and that the matter would be attended to. Halteman testified that he told Porter at the time that appellee wanted to pay for the permit and the premium at the same time. Porter denies this. There was other evidence introduced not necessary to mention here.

The court gave three instructions. The first one is as follows: "If the jury believe from the evidence the plaintiff was ready, willing and able to pay the premium at the time it was due, and that he employed T. Halteman to procure for him a permit for his property to be occupied by a tenant; if the jury further believes from the evidence the defendant's agent, J. A. Porter, and said T. Halteman acting for the plaintiff as his agent, entered into a contract or agreement by the terms of which the defendant was to issue to plaintiff a tenancy permit, and that the payment of premium note was to be deferred until said permit should be issued; and if the jury further believe from the evidence the plaintiff had received no notice from the defendant before the destruction of his property by fire that the permit would not be issued until the premium was first paid, the law is for the plaintiff, and the jury should so find."

The second instruction was the measure of damages, and the third the converse of the first.

In the case of Blackerby v. Continental Ins. Co., 83 Ky., 580, the court said: "While, however, the time of payment of a premium is of the essence of a contract of insurance, and while the conditions of a policy, which the court regards as valid, can not be held to be meaningless or be avoided, save for a sufficient cause, yet forfeitures are not regarded with favor. The belief long prevailed that the insurance business could not be carried on without the power to impose the most stringent conditions for delinquency, owing to the fact that prompt payments constitute its very life; and while this is so, yet more liberal views have properly obtained of late, and the contract will be liberally construed as to the insured. We do not mean by this that the law will not uphold a condition in a policy which is not illegal and contrary to public policy, but that a court will seize hold of a reasonable excuse to avoid forfeiture. If, for instance, the insured can show some reasonable excuse for nonpayment of a premium, based upon the conduct of the insurer, the policy will not be regarded as forfeited."

It is further shown in the proof that one or two of the previous premiums were paid after their maturity without objection or complaint or forfeiture or lapse, and it is shown by the note of appellee to appellant's agent that it was his purpose to retain the premium until he ascertained the additional cost occasioned by the tenancy permit, and to remit it all at one time, and the statement by appellant's agent, Porter, to appellee's agent, Halteman, in effect that this would be all right, this, in our opinion, was sufficient to lull appellee into feeling that he was secure, and that his interests were protected. The instructions of the court were right and proper, and there was at least some evidence authorizing the jury to return a verdict for the plaintiff.

Finding no error prejudicial to the rights of the appellant the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

---

CLEVELAND ORPHAN INSTITUTION, &c. v. HELM, &c.

(Filed May 19, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Probate of wills—Statute of limitation—In 1890 H. died, and no will being found, his mother administered on his estate. The property was sold and proceeds distributed among his heirs as in case of intestacy. More than eleven years after his death a will was found, in which appellants were designated as devisees in remainder after the death of his mother, who was given the life estate. This will was offered for probate, and the county court refused to admit it to probate as the statute of limitation of ten years was interposed as a defense. The action of the lower court was approved on appeal to the circuit court. On this appeal, Held—That while no section of the Kentucky Statutes fixing a statute of limitation by specific terms applies to probate of wills, yet section 2522, Kentucky Statutes, providing a limitation of ten years for all cases not specifically provided for, applies to this case, and the will was properly refused to be probated.

D. L. Thornton, W. O. Davis and Field McLeod for appellants.

Geo. B. Kinhead for appellees.

Appeal from Woodford Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

On the 16th day of October, 1890, T. Logan Helm, a citizen of Woodford county, Ky., accidentally met his death in the county of Orange and State of Florida, at which place he had certain interests and was temporarily sojourning. No will was found at the time of his death, and it was believed by all who were associated with him, or related to him, that he died intestate. At the time of his death he owned an undivided one-third interest in an estate left by his father, J. D. Helm, which consisted largely of valuable land in Woodford county, Ky. He was also the owner of three small tracts of land, with orange groves on them, in Florida. His mother, believing that he died intestate, administered upon his estate in Florida, and settled his estate there by the sale of his lands and the payment of his debts. This occurred in the year 1891. On the 28th day of July, 1902, eleven years and nine months after the death of Helm, a paper purporting to be the last will and testament of T. Logan Helm was produced by one of the officers of the bank of Woodford, and offered for probate in the Woodford County Court. By this paper, which appeared to have been written by Helm, he devised a life estate in all his property to his mother, Mrs. Mary Helm, with remainder to the appellants, Cleveland Orphan Institution, at Versailles, Ky., the Kentucky Female Orphan School at Midway, Ky., the St. John's Protestant Episcopal Church and the trustees for the common schools of Woodford county, Kentucky. The father of the decedent had died some years before the date of his death, and his mother and only sister survived him as his sole heirs at law. This sister, Miss Margaret Helm, and his mother, Mrs. Mary Helm, appeared in the Woodford County Court, and then on appeal in the Woodford Circuit Court, and interposing the plea of the statute of limitations, resisted the motion to probate the paper as the last will and testament of T. Logan Helm. The lower court sustained their plea and dismissed the proceedings to probate the will. Appellants have appealed from that judgment to this court.

In the case of Allen, &c. v. Froman, 96 Ky., 316, the court said: "Indeed there is no provision in chapter 71, the title of which is 'limitation of actions,' that in terms does fix the limit of time within which wills may be probated, and if done at all, it is by section 9, article 3, as follows: 'An action for relief not provided for in this or some other chapter can only be commenced within ten years next after the cause of action accrued.' The language of that section does in fact, and we must consequently hold was intended to, comprehend every case of relief not elsewhere in the General Statutes directly provided for, whether sought by action or proceeding. For section 27, chapter 21, provides that the term 'action,' when used in this revision, shall be construed to include all proceedings in any court in this Commonwealth. We can see no reason why a period of time should not be fixed for probating wills as well as for instituting or commencing any other action or proceeding for relief, for fraud may be perpetrated in the matter of probating wills by reason of death of witnesses to the transaction, and innocent purchasers disturbed and deprived of property honestly acquired, by setting up false wills after a long lapse of time, as can occur in any other case. So, as held by the court in Hoffert v. Miller, 86 Ky., 572, it has become legislative policy of this State to fix in every case a limit of time for beginning every action or proceeding for relief, and section 9, article 3, was intended for that purpose."

These sections of the General Statutes were in force at the time of the death of T. Logan Helm, and the same provisions are in the Kentucky Statutes now in force.

Appellants concede that the case above referred to is in opposition to their claim, and insist that this court overrule the case of Allen v. Froman, and claim that section 2522, Kentucky Statutes, which is the same as section 9, article 3, General Statutes, does not apply to the probaton of wills, and refers this court to 5 Littell, 274. At the time this case was decided there was no statute in this State similar to section 2522, and consequently that case can have no bearing on the issue here. Since the case of Allen v. Froman was decided this court decided and ordered to be reported the case of Reid's Adm'r v. Bengel, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 22-3, in which case the case of Allen v. Froman was cited and approved, the court using this language: "It is well settled in this State that a will may be probated at any time within ten years after the death of the testator."

We are of the opinion that the principles settled in the cases above referred to are sound and should be upheld for the reason that the public have a great interest in having a known limit fixed by law to litigation for the quiet of the community, and that there may be a certain fixed period after which the possessor may know that his title and right can not be called in question or harrassed by stale demands after witnesses of the facts are dead.

We have been unable to find anything in the pleadings which will bring appellants within any of the exceptions to prevent the running of the statute of limitation. Appellants complain of this part of the judgment of the lower court: "And it is adjudged by the court that neither said paper, nor any part thereof, is the last will and testament of T. Logan Helm, deceased." This language is surplusage, and can not have any effect. The only question before the court was whether or not the paper purporting to be the will should be probated. The court properly adjudged that it should not be as it was barred by the statute of limitation.

Finding no error prejudicial to the rights of appellants the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

---

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE R. R. CO. v. HALL.

(Filed May 19, 1903—Not to be reported.)

1. Railroads—Negligence—Statute of limitation—Pleading—Appellee was an employe of appellant, performing duties at coal bins which supplied its engines with coal, and while descending a ladder on the side of a box car was struck by a portable chute and knocked between the cars and his legs were crushed, which necessitated their amputation. This action was filed, also an answer pleading contributory negligence. Before any reply was filed to same an amended answer was filed, interposing the plea that the action was barred by statute of limitation of one year because the petition was not filed and summons issued thereon within one year after the injury as required by sections 2524, Kentucky Statutes, and section 59, Civil Code of Practice. To the filing of this amendment appellee objected and the court sustained the objection. Appellee to support his objection filed the affidavit of the circuit court clerk, stating that he had received the petition by mail, with instructions to file it and issue summons on it eleven days before the expiration of the year, but the tax not accompanying the petition, and not being acquainted with either the plaintiff or his attorney, he did not file it, but several days before the expiration of the time he met plaintiff's attorney and told him that the suit was filed and summons issued, honestly thinking he had filed it. Upon discovering his mistake he filed it and issued summons on it, but not until after the expiration of one year from the injury. A trial resulted in a verdict and judgment for plaintiff for $10,000 damages. The failure of the court to permit the amended answer to be filed is relied on as a ground for reversal. Held—That the court erred in refusing to permit the amended answer to be filed as a party has the right to amend an answer at any time without leave before reply is filed to same, and no reply was filed before the amendment was tendered, but same would not have been available if the statements had been true as plaintiff, by filing his petition with the clerk with instructions to issue summons thereon, had done all he could, and could not be prejudiced by the failure of the clerk to perform his duty within proper time.

2. Instructions—It was erroneous to instruct the jury that it was the duty of the railroad company to keep the coal chute far enough from the track to permit a person on a ladder on the side of a car to pass without injury. The company was only required to exercise reasonable care to prevent such injury. It was also erroneous as it only required plaintiff to know that the chute was too close to the car when the instruction should have added that he knew or could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have known.

3. Measure of damages—The court erred in its instruction which fixed the measure of damages. In this case, where death did not ensue, the court should have instructed the jury that compensatory damages should be confined to the expense of cure, value of time lost and fair compensation for physical and mental suffering caused by the injury, and for any permanent reduction of power to earn money. No instruction authorizing punitive damages should have been given as the proof did not show that appellant was guilty of any gross negligence.

4. Verdict flagrantly against the evidence—A new trial should have been granted as the verdict was flagrantly against the evidence.

Fairleigh, Straus & Eagles, B. D. Warfield and E. W. Hines for appellant.

W. S. Pryor and B. F. Cooper for appellee.

Appeal from Bullitt Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Burnam.

The appellee, W. H. Hall, was one of a gang of laborers employed by the appellant, the Louisville & Nashville R. R. Co., to perform such services as might be necessary about their coal bins from which it supplied its engines with coal at Lebanon Junction. The bins are about eight hundred feet in length and are built along a side track, on which appellant operated three large portable coal chutes from which the tenders of the engines were loaded. On the 15th of August, 1899, the appellee, Hall, came in contact with one of these coal chutes whilst descending the side ladder from the top of a box car attached to a moving freight train, and was knocked between two cars, and his legs run over and so crushed as to require amputation. On the 16th of August, 1900, he instituted this suit for damages, alleging as a cause of action that he had been directed by the foreman in charge of the coal bins to try to detect certain parties who were stealing coal from the bins, and for this purpose was allowed to board freight trains after they had been supplied with coal and ride along the bins; that on the 15th day of August, 1899, he climbed to the top of a box car of a slowly passing train and remained on the top of the car until it had passed, as he supposed, the three coal chutes on the side track; that he then descended the side ladder of the box car for the purpose of alighting near the far end of the coal bins, when he suddenly came in contact with one of these chutes, which had been moved from its customary place near the other two and without his knowledge, and had been negligently left standing on the side track in such close proximity to the main track that his body could not pass between the chute and the moving train; and that as a result of this negligence he was knocked from the side of the car and run over by the train, sustaining injuries therefrom which resulted in the loss of both of his legs. He charges that these injuries were the result of the defendant's negligence in failing to construct and keep its portable coal chutes at a proper and safe distance from its passing cars.

At the following September term of the Bullitt Circuit Court defendant answered, traversing specifically all the affirmative allegations of plaintiff's petition, and saying further, by way of defense, that the plaintiff had been employed about its coal bins for many months prior to receiving the injuries sued for; that he was familiar with its portable chutes and the construction thereof, and was thoroughly familiar with their proximity to the main track; that he received the injuries sued for whilst he was riding on the side ladder of one of their freight cars in violation of one of the rules of the company, and for his own pleasure and convenience, and not on any business of the company or in obedience to any direction, express or implied, of the foreman of the coal bins; that he was at a place where he had no right to be, and where no duty of his employment called him, and received the injuries complained of as the result of his own contributory negligence. The pleadings were not made up at the September term. At the following March term of the court, before a reply had been filed, the defendant tendered and offered to file an amended answer, in which they alleged that more than one year had elapsed between the 15th day of August, 1899, when plaintiff's right of action accrued, and the 16th of August, 1900, when this suit was filed and summons issued thereon, and relied upon the lapse of time and the statute of limitation, and averred that this plea was omitted from the original answer by oversight and mistake on the part of the attorney. Plaintiff objected to the filing of this amended answer, and filed the affidavit of O. W. Pearl, clerk of the Bullitt Circuit Court, in which he stated that about the 5th of August, 1900, he received the petition in this case in a letter from plaintiff's attorney, requesting that same be filed and summons issued thereon, but that no tax accompanied the petition; and that as he did not know either the plaintiff or his attorney he did not file the petition, but when asked about the matter by plaintiff's attorney several days prior to the 16th of August, 1900, informed him in good faith that it had been filed; and that he thought so at the time, and did not discover his mistake until the 16th of August, 1900, when he filed the petition and issued summons thereon. The trial court refused to permit the amended answer to be filed. The pleadings being made up by reply, a trial before a jury at the December term, 1901, resulted in a verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $10,000.

Grounds and motion for a new trial having been overruled the defendant appeals, relying for a reversal upon numerous alleged errors to their prejudice in the court below. First in order was the refusal of the trial court to permit the plea of limitation set up in the amended answer to go in.

By section 2524 of the Kentucky Statutes it is provided that "an action shall be deemed to have been commenced at the date of the first summons or process issued in good faith from the court or tribunal having jurisdiction of the cause of action."

Section 39 of the Civil Code of Practice is as follows: "An action is commenced by filing in the office of the clerk of the proper court, a petition stating the plaintiff's cause of action; or, in cases wherein written pleadings are not required, by filing in such court the account, or written contract, or a short written statement of the facts on which the action is founded; and, in either case, by causing a summons to be issued or a warning order to be made thereon."

In Kellar v. Stanley, 86 Ky., 240, it was held that an action was not commenced until a summons was issued or a warning order made. In L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Smith's Adm'r, 87 Ky., 501, which was a suit for damages for personal injuries, the petition was filed and summons issued thereon and served upon the appellant within a year from the accrual of the cause of action, but the summons cited the appellant to appear at the next term of the court, which commenced within ten days from the date of the summons. At the following term of the court the summons, upon defendant's motion, was quashed upon the ground that it was made returnable to a term of court commencing within ten days from its date. Thereafter an alias summons was issued and served, and more than a year having elapsed from the accrual of the cause of action to the issuing of the alias summons, plaintiff plead the statute of one year's limitation as a bar to appellee's right to maintain the action, and it was held that where the plaintiff had filed his petition and caused summons to issue thereon in time to save his right of action he had done all that the law required him to do, as it was the duty of the clerk to issue the summons to the proper term of court, and it was not incumbent upon the plaintiff to see that he did so. The ruling in this case was followed in the case of the L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Bowen, 18 Ky. Law Rep., 1099.

In that case the petition was filed in time, but the summons was issued in the name of D. C. Brown instead of D. C. Bowen, and it was held that when plaintiff filed his suit and had summons issued he had a right to believe that the clerk would issue it in his name and that limitation did not run. These cases involved the construction of the Code provisions. In Clark v. Kellar, 66 Ky., 223, the court had before it a case arising under section 2524 of the Statutes, and it was held that if five years was permitted to elapse after the suing out of process, which had been returned unexecuted, until another process was sued out and executed the bar was effectual. In Hiatt v. Bank of Kentucky, 71 Ky., 193, it was held that an action was commenced when the first summons thereon was issued in good faith.

In all the cases bearing upon this question which we have been able to find the plaintiff had filed his petition in the clerk's office and caused summons to be issued thereon within the statutory period of limitation, it was held that this was the limit of his duty; that he had a right to rely upon the clerk to issue the summons in proper form and to the proper court. It appears both from the reasoning and decision in each of these cases that the duty on the part of the plaintiff to file his petition and have summons issued thereon within the statutory period was mandatory; and that any negligence in this respect could not be charged to the clerk as an excuse for the plaintiff's failure to perform his duty. But in the case at bar another very serious question arises. The clerk in his affidavit testifies that whilst the petition was mailed to him within the period of limitation, it was not accompanied by the tax on the suit; that he was unacquainted with the plaintiff and his attorney, and for this reason declined to file the petition or issue the process, nor does it appear that this omission was ever supplied. As said in Wood v. Carpenter, 100 U. S., 135: "Statutes of limitation are vital to the welfare of society and are favored by the law. They are found and approved in all systems of enlightened jurisprudence. They promote repose by giving security and stability to human affairs. An important public policy lies at their foundation. They stimulate to activity and punish negligence. While time is constantly destroying the evidences of rights, they supply its place by a presumption which rendered proof unnecessary. Mere delay, extending to the limit prescribed, is itself a conclusive bar. The bane and the antidote go together."

Section 132 of the Civil Code provides that the plaintiff may at any time before answer amend his petition without leave. In this case no reply had been filed to defendant's original answer and the amendment was tendered for the purpose of supplying a defense which had been omitted from the original answer by the oversight and mistake of counsel. Section 134 of the Civil Code provides that the court may at any time in furtherance of justice permit a pleading to be amended by correcting a mistake in any respect, and, in our opinion, the trial court erred in refusing to permit the amended answer to be filed, and upon return of the case the amended answer should be filed and plaintiff allowed to reply thereto.

We will next consider alleged errors in the instructions Nos. 1 and 2, given to the jury on plaintiff's motion. No. 1 is as follows: "The court instructs the jury that it was the duty of the defendant to keep its portable chute, when not in use, at such distance from its moving trains as was reasonably necessary to enable its servants to ascend or descend the side ladders of its freight trains in the discharge of their duties, with reasonable safety, without the exercise of more than ordinary care. And if the jury believe from a preponderance of the evidence that the plaintiff was injured whilst discharging in good faith his duty to defendant, under the directions of defendant's employe superior in authority to plaintiff, and that his injuries in controversy were caused by the gross negligence of defendant, its agents or employes, in failing to keep, if it did so ~~fast~~, its portable chute when not in use at a reasonably safe distance from the side ladders on its moving trains, the law is for the plaintiff, and the jury should so find. If, however, the jury believe the plaintiff knew that the defendant's portable chute was too close for reasonably safe passage on the side ladder of defendant's train at the time and place in controversy, then, in that event, the law is for the defendant, and the jury should so find."

By this instruction the jury are told, as a matter of law, that it was negligence in appellant not to keep its coal chute far enough from the track so as not to injure employes on the side ladders of passing cars. Whether or not it is possible to maintain a portable coal chute used for furnishing coal to passing engines so far away from moving trains that one on the side ladder of a box car may pass safely between the chute and the train was a question of fact for the jury. It may be that it is absolutely necessary to construct coal bins as in the case at bar, and if it be not so, still it may not be negligence to do so.

In the case of L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Mounce's Adm'r, ante, 1878, decided January 23, 1903, where damages were sought for the death of a switchman in appellant's yard at Livingston, by reason of the alleged fact that the switch lights were unlighted, the court used this language: "Besides, instruction No. 1 given to the jury is erroneous and prejudicial to the defendant, as in it the court told the jury that it was defendant's duty to have the lights in reasonably good order and condition to show the location of the switch, and if he failed to do so, plaintiff was entitled to recover. Under this instruction, if the jury found that the lights were out, it was bound to find for the plaintiff, however great may have been the care exercised by the defendant. As was said by this court in Needham v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 85 Ky., 425: 'It is the duty of the master to use ordinary care in providing for the use of the servant safe machinery and premises in safe condition. He is not, however, an insurer.' In Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, section 189, 4th edition, the principle is stated in these words: 'The master is bound to use ordinary care, diligence and skill, for the purpose of protecting his servants from encountering unnecessary risks in the service; but he is not bound to use any higher degree of care for that purpose.' These citations are in accord with the great weight of authority on this subject. In fact we know of none to the contrary."

This instruction is objectionable for another reason, as it only requires plaintiff "to know" that the chute was too close to the track for reasonably safe passage by it on the side ladder of the car. It should have contained the additional qualification that he knew or could by the exercise of ordinary care have known.

The verbiage of the second instruction is also unusual and calculated to mislead the jury. It tells the jury that "if they find for the plaintiff they should award such damages, if any, as the proof shows he has sustained."

This general expression is followed by the words: "In estimating the amount of damage the jury should take into consideration the age and situation of the plaintiff, his earning capacity, and its probable duration, and his bodily suffering and mental anguish, and the extent to which he is disabled in making a support for himself by reason of the injuries received, and the jury, in addition to such compensatory damages, may award punitive damages not exceeding in all $25,000."

This court has frequently announced in actions for personal injuries, where death does not ensue, that compensatory damages were confined to the expense of cure, value of time lost, and fair compensation for physical and mental suffering caused by the injury and for any permanent reduction of the power to earn money. (Parker v. Jenkins, 66 Ky., 560; L., C. & L. R. R. Co. v. Case's Adm'r, 72 Ky., 736; C., P. & R. v. Kuhn, 86 Ky., 578; Carson v. Singleton, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1676.) The instruction is erroneous in that it does not confine the jury to the consideration of these elements of damage. It is also erroneous in telling them that they should take into consideration the situation of the plaintiff, and in authorizing punitive damages. Both for the reason that the jury are not required to find as a condition precedent to awarding such damages that the acts of the defendant which are complained of amounted to gross negligence, and for the reason that the proof discloses no ground for the recovery of punitive damages at all. The plaintiff admitted that he knew the coal chutes were portable and were frequently moved from one place to another; and that they were too close to the track for reasonably safe passage by them of a man riding upon the side ladder of a moving box car; that his injuries resulted solely from the fact that he believed the car on which he was riding had passed beyond the chutes before he attempted to descend the side ladder for the purpose of alighting.

Appellant insists that the overwhelming weight of testimony in the case conduces to show that appellee got upon the car for his own purposes and not in the interest of business of the company; that he had full information as to the relative location of the coal chutes, and that his injuries resulted from his negligence in riding on the side ladder of the box car without proper precautions on his part to avoid being struck by the coal chute; and that a peremptory instruction should have gone. Where there is any conflict in the testimony questions of negligence should be left to the jury; but, in our opinion, there was such a decisive preponderance of the evidence in this case against the finding of the jury that it should have been set aside and a new trial awarded on this ground as well as for errors of the court pointed out in the opinion.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

---

MORRISON v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed May 19, 1903—Not to be reported.)

1. Criminal law—Evidence—Appellant prosecutes this appeal from a conviction and sentence to confinement in the penitentiary under an indictment for the murder of D. The proof showed that D. was trying to induce his sister to come off the street and away from the company of appellant, with whom she had improper relations, and a slight difficulty took place between brother and sister, when appellant ran up and stabbed D. in the back. It is insisted that the court erred in admitting testimony that the sister and appellant had for some time past been living in improper relations. Held—

That this evidence was properly admitted for it explained the circumstances of the parties and illustrated their motives. The evidence also went to the interest of the sister as a witness. Appellant offered to prove by a number of witnesses that the deceased was by character a violent and dangerous man, who usually carried deadly weapons. He also offered to prove by several witnesses that the deceased had threatened to kill him, and that these threats had been communicated to him. Held—That while this evidence is usually proper to be proved, yet the court properly excluded said testimony, as the proof shows that appellant was the aggressor in the difficulty.

2. Instructions—Appellant could not be excused on the ground that he interfered for the protection of the life of the sister, or to protect her from great bodily harm at the hands of her brother, as the proof fails to show that the trouble between brother and sister was such as to threaten her life or to inflict great bodily harm, and as the assault was not felonious, appellant not standing in any privileged relation to her, had no right to interfere.

Jas. Andrew Scott and B. G. Williams for appellant.

C. J. Pratt and M. R. Todd for appellee.

Appeal from Franklin Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson.

Appellant, William Morrison, was indicted for the murder of Alex. Dean, and was convicted of manslaughter and his punishment fixed at confinement in the penitentiary for eleven years. The proof shows that Ida Dean, a sister of the deceased, had borrowed an umbrella on the afternoon of the day of the homicide, she promising to return it that evening. About half-past eight o'clock she came up the street with the umbrella, and meeting George Turner, asked him if he had seen Morrison. They went on together and soon met Alex. Dean, who took hold of his sister and told her to go home, upbraiding her for being out looking for Morrison. There is a conflict of evidence as to what followed. The proof for the Commonwealth is that Alex. Dean went along the street with his sister, pushing her along about ninety feet, when she stopped, declining to go any further, and about this time Morrison seeing them, ran down to where they were on his tip-toes and stabbed Dean in the back; that he immediately fell to the ground, uttering no sound, except a groan, and died in a few minutes. The proof for the defendant is that Morrison heard some one say that Alex. Dean was beating his sister, and ran out to where they were, putting his hand on Alex. Dean's shoulder and saying: "You can't beat her where I am;" that Dean immediately drew a pistol and said, with an oath, "I will kill you both;" that Morrison caught the pistol and they clinched, and as they fell he stabbed Dean in the back with his knife. This proof is made by Morrison himself, and also by Ida Dean, who testified in his behalf, and by Turner. No pistol was found on Dean's person, or on the ground where he fell, nor is it shown by any other proof that he had a pistol. The proof shows that Dean was smoking a pipe and that when he and his sister stopped at the place where the homicide took place, and she declined to go any further, she struck him with the umbrella and knocked the fire out of his pipe. This pipe was found on the ground after the homicide, and it may be that this is what Dean had in his hand when Morrison came up. The point at which the difficulty occurred was near the center of the square and not well lighted by the street lamps.

The court allowed the Commonwealth to prove by both Morrison and Ida Dean, on cross-examination, in effect, that Morrison was, and had been for some time past, living in improper relations with Ida Dean. This evidence was objected to, but was properly admitted, for it explained the circumstances of the parties and illustrated their motives. The evidence also went to the interest of the witness, Ida Dean, and to show bias.

Morrison offered to prove by a number of witnesses that the deceased was, by character, a violent and dangerous man, who usually carried deadly weapons. He also offered to show by several witnesses that the deceased had threatened to kill him, and that these threats had been communicated to him. This evidence was excluded by the court.

In Roberson on Criminal Law, section 240, it is said: "If the deceased was a man of violent and dangerous character, more prompt and decisive measures of defense would be justifiable than if he were of a peaceable disposition. Hence in cases of homicide, evidence that the deceased was a violent, quarrelsome, turbulent, dangerous or vindictive man, or was in the habit of carrying concealed weapons, is admissible to show, or as tending to show, that defendant acted in self-defense, or under such circumstances as would have naturally caused a man of ordinary reason to believe that he was, at the time of the killing, in imminent danger of losing his life or of suffering great bodily harm at the hands of deceased. * * * But evidence of the character here spoken of is not admissible where the defendant was the aggressor, nor until a proper foundation is laid by showing an overt act or hostile demonstration toward defendant by deceased before he was killed." (Payne v. Commonwealth, 58 Ky., 379; Riley v. Commonwealth, 94 Ky., 266; Commonwealth v. Hoskins, 18 Ky. Law Rep., 60.)

In Roberson on Criminal Law, section 223, it is also said: "Upon the issue of self-defense, or where there is a doubt concerning the defendant's motive in committing the homicide, whether he was actuated by malice or believed that he was in danger from deceased, he may prove that deceased had made threats against his person or life, as tending to show that he was in peril at the time of the homicide, or that he had reasonable grounds upon which to believe that he was in such peril; provided such threats were communicated to defendant before the killing. * * * But where there is no evidence of an overt act or hostile demonstration on the part of the deceased, evincing a present purpose to carry the threats into execution, nor any doubt that defendant was the aggressor, evidence of previous threats by deceased against the defendant, although they were communicated to defendant, is not admissible." (3 Rice on Evidence, 362; Wharton, Criminal Evidence, section 757; 9 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 673.)

It will thus be seen that the admissibility of the evidence in question depends upon whether the defendant was the aggressor in the difficulty, for if he knew that deceased had threatened his life and was a violent and dangerous man, so much the more reason would there be that the defendant should not be the aggressor in the difficulty. The court, after giving the usual instruction on murder, manslaughter and reasonable doubt, instructed the jury as follows on self-defense: "If the jury believe from the evidence that the defendant at the time he cut and killed the said Alex. Dean, if he did cut and kill him, believed, and had reasonable grounds to believe, that the said Alex. Dean was then and there about to take his life or inflict on him great bodily harm, and there appeared to him, in the exercise of a reasonable judgment, no other safe means to avert the real, or to him apparent, danger, if any, but to cut the said Dean, then he had the right to do so, and they ought to acquit him on the ground of self-defense."

The Commonwealth complains of this instruction as too favorable to the accused, in that it allows him to rely on self-defense, although he was the aggressor in the difficulty. He, however, insists that the instruction was not as favorable to him as it should have been, and that the court erred in refusing to allow the following instruction which he asked: "The court instructs the jury that if they shall believe from the evidence that just before he was cut and killed the deceased, Alexander Dean, was, without any fault on her part, engaged in an assault upon Ida Dean, within the sight and hearing of the defendant, William Morrison, and that said Morrison had a right to believe, and did in good faith believe, that said Dean was then and there about to inflict upon said Ida Dean either loss of life or great bodily harm, then said Morrison had a right to interfere for her protection and stop said assault by all such reasonable means as appeared to him to be necessary to that end; and if in doing so it became necessary, or apparently necessary, for him to take the life of said Dean, he had the right to do so, and the jury should acquit him, for what a man may do for himself, he may do for another."

The defendant Morrison's testimony as to how the difficulty came up is in these words: "I ran down that way; I did not go very fast, and I went down; why he had her up against the house beating her and I caught him on one shoulder and shoved them apart and told him 'you can't beat her where I am,' and he drew a pistol and said, 'I will kill both of you.' * * * My intention was to keep him from hitting her. * * * He was striking her in the face with his fist when I got to him. * * * It seemed to very near knock her to the ground. The last one knocked her up against the house; she would have fallen if it had not been for the house. * * * He drew his pistol and I grabbed his hand and he struggled. * * * We both went to the ground. * * * I cut him while I was in the fall."

Turner and Ida Dean make in substance the same statement. On the other hand, the Commonwealth's witnesses all say that Dean was simply pushing his sister along the side of the street. They all agree that Morrison ran at least ninety feet on tip-toe before he came up to them. We do not see anything in the evidence to warrant the belief that Alex. Dean was about to kill his sister or do her some great bodily harm. It is true he wanted her to go home, and she declined to go. She struck him with the umbrella, and whether he then struck her or pushed her against the house, it is reasonably clear that no harm would have come of the quarrel between brother and sister if Morrison had not intervened. The proof shows that she was a small, frail woman, and that Alex. Dean only wanted her to get off the street. So the case comes to this: Did Morrison when he saw Alex. Dean committing an assault on his sister, and pushing or striking her against the house, have a right to intervene between the brother and sister for her protection from a simple battery?

In 1 Bishop on Criminal Law, section 877, it is said: "The doctrine here is that whatever one may do for himself he may do for another. The common case, indeed, is where a father, son, brother, husband, servant, or the like, protects by the stronger arm the feebler. But a guest in a house may defend the house; or the neighbors of the occupant may assemble for its defense; and, on the whole, though distinctions have been taken and doubts expressed, the better view plainly is that one may do for another whatever the other may do for himself."

The statement of the law as applied to simple batteries and breaches of the peace is broader than it is usually put in the authorities. Thus in 3 Blackstone it is said: "The defense of one's self, or the mutual and reciprocal defense of such as stand in relations of husband and wife, parent and child, master and servant. In these cases, if the party himself, or any of these, his relations, be forcibly attacked in his person or property, it is lawful for him to repel force by force; and the breach of the peace which happens is chargeable upon him only who began the affray."

In a note to this it is added: "When a person does not stand in either of these relations he can not justify an interference on behalf of the party injured, but merely as an indifferent person to preserve the peace." (2 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 981; 2 Roberson's Criminal Law, section 543.)

When a felony is apparently about to be committed, as where there is apparent danger of loss of life by the person assailed or of great bodily harm to him, a different rule prevails, and there any third person may lawfully intervene for his protection, using such means for his defense as the person assaulted himself may lawfully use. But where the assault is not felonious and the person intervening does not stand in any of the relations to the one assaulted excepted out of the common-law rule, then he who intervenes can only act for the preservation of the peace. He can not come into the difficulty for the purpose of taking the place of the person assailed and continuing the fight. This is the common-law rule, as we understand the authorities, and we can not depart from it or extend it.

It is conceded on all hands that Morrison ran down on tip-toe to where Alex. Dean and his sister were, some ninety feet away. If when he got there he at once stabbed Dean in the back, as stated by the witnesses for the Commonwealth, he was the aggressor. The instruction of the court, which submitted to the jury the question whether Morrison believed, or had reasonable grounds to believe, himself in danger of death or great bodily harm at the hands of Dean when he stabbed him, was more favorable to Morrison than the law warranted, as the court did not submit to the jury the question whether Morrison was the aggressor.

Morrison knew that the illicit relations between him and Ida Dean were the foundation of the animosity of Alex. Dean to him. He also knew that this was the cause of the quarrel between the brother and sister. With this knowledge he ran on tip-toe down to where they were, armed with a dirk, and if, as he says, he caught Alex. Dean by the shoulder and shoved them apart, saying to him, "you can't beat her where I am," his interference was not as an indifferent person to preserve the peace; for his first act was to commit a battery on Alex. Dean by taking him by the shoulder, and this was followed up by a declaration which he could but know, under all the circumstances, would make Alex. Dean regard him as an assailant. To hold that he intervened under the evidence as an indifferent person to preserve the peace would be to give no real effect to the common-law rule allowing greater rights to parent and child, husband and wife, master and servant, or the like, than to other persons in cases of simple batteries or breaches of the peace.

According to his own testimony, the manner of his approach, his conduct on reaching Alex. Dean, and his declaration to him, under the circumstances were not those of one bent on peace, but of one proposing to champion the woman and fight her battles for her. He was, therefore, the aggressor, and the court did not err in refusing to admit the proof as to the bad character of Alex. Dean, or his previous threats; and this evidence, if admitted, could not have been of material service to the defendant under the view of the law which we have indicated, for the jury might have inferred that when he interfered, with knowledge of the previous threats and the character of Dean, he anticipated the result that ensued. The verdict of the jury finding him guilty of manslaughter and fixing his punishment at eleven years in the penitentiary seems to have been due to their accepting the version of the transaction as given by the witnesses for the Commonwealth, and their believing that Morrison acted in sudden heat on seeing the woman assailed by her brother.

Judgment affirmed.

Whole court sitting.

Judge Nunn dissenting.

---

TERRY v. HARGIS, JUDGE, &c.

(Filed May 19, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Office and officer—Sheriffs—Vacancies—Constitutional law—C. was elected sheriff of Breathitt county in 1897 for a term of four years, and resigned on January 1, 1900, and appellant was appointed by the county court to fill the vacancy. At the November election, 1901, appellant and appellee Callahan were opposing candidates for sheriff, and Callahan was given the certificate of election. On a contest instituted by appellant, the election was declared void and the county court appointed Callahan to fill the vacancy. Appellant appeared before the county judge and offered to renew his bond as sheriff, which offer was refused. Whereupon he instituted this action for a mandamus compelling the county judge to accept said bond and admit him to qualify as sheriff, claiming the right to same until his successor is legally elected and qualified. The only question presented on this appeal is whether appellant has the right to hold over under his appointment of January, 1900. Held—That it was not the intention of the framers of the Constitution that section 99 should authorize an officer designated therein, who might be appointed to fill a vacancy, to hold over under such appointment during the succeeding term of said office, and the mandamus was properly refused as Callahan is entitled to the office under his appointment.

J. B. Marcum for appellant.

J. J. C. Bach for appellees.

Appeal from Breathitt Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

In 1897 J. S. Cope was elected sheriff of Breathitt county for a term of four years, that being the regular time for electing a sheriff. On January 1, 1900, he resigned, and on that day appellant, Charles Terry, was appointed by the county court to fill the vacancy caused by Cope's resignation. At the November election, 1901, appellant and appellee Callahan were opposing candidates for the office of sheriff. Callahan, on the face of the returns, was elected by sixteen majority, and received a certificate of election. Terry at once instituted contest proceedings, and on December 6, 1902, the circuit court decided that the election of 1901 was void, and that neither Callahan nor appellant was entitled to the office of sheriff under that election. On the first Monday in January, 1903, appellant Terry appeared before appellee Hargis, who was county judge, and offered to renew his bond as sheriff for the year 1903 under his appointment of January 1, 1900. Appellee Hargis refused to allow him to execute bond, on the ground that Terry did not hold over under his appointment and that the office was vacant; whereupon he appointed appellee Callahan to fill the vacancy and accepted bond from him. Appellant then instituted this action to compel the county judge to accept his bond and to enjoin Callahan from acting. The circuit court having sustained a demurrer to the petition the same was dismissed, and hence this appeal. The only question raised by the appeal is whether Terry has a right to hold over under his appointment of January, 1900. If there was a vacancy in the office when the county court appointed appellee Callahan the court had the right to fill it, but if Terry has the right to hold over, of course there was no vacancy, and the order appointing Callahan was void.

Appellant claims that Terry was appointed to fill the unexpired term of Cope, which did not end until the election and qualification of Cope's successor; or, in other words, he contends that he not only had the right by his appointment to fill out the unexpired four-year term of Cope, but to hold on during the succeeding four-year term in the event no successor was elected and qualified. This question has been settled by this court by two decisions. The first case is Campbell v. Dotson, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 510. In that case A. W. Campbell was elected justice of the peace for magisterial district No. 5 of Pike county, and entered upon the discharge of the duties of the office. At the November election, 1897, the regular election for justices of the peace, J. J. Woolford, was elected to succeed appellant, but failed to qualify as provided by law. After Woolford failed to qualify the county judge entered an order declaring a vacancy to exist in the office of justice of the peace in that district, and appellee, J. L. Dotson, was regularly appointed to fill the vacancy. Appellant Campbell insisted that there was no vacancy to be filled, and that he was still the rightful officer under section 99 of the Constitution, which section reads as follows: "There shall be elected in 1894 in each county a judge of the county court, a county court clerk, a county attorney, sheriff, jailer, coroner, surveyor and assessor, and in each justice's district one justice of the peace and one constable, who shall enter upon the discharge of the duties of their offices on the first Monday in January after their election, and continue in office three years, and until the election and qualification of their successors; and in 1897, and every four years thereafter, there shall be an election in each county of the officers mentioned, who shall hold their offices for four years from (the first Monday in January after their election), and until the election and qualification of their successors."

Appellant in that case contended that under that section he continued in office for three years, and until the election and qualification of his successor, and that as Woolford was elected and failed to qualify, his right to the office was not interrupted. The court in that case decided against Campbell, and said: "The construction urged by appellant is wholly out of keeping with the spirit and purpose of the constitutional provision. It is true appellant holds until the election and qualification of his successor. His successor was elected at the November election, 1897. The person elected having died before the time for him to take possession of the office, the term for which he was elected became vacant, just as much as if he had died after qualifying, but before the time for entering upon the duties of his office, and when Dotson was appointed to fill this vacancy, gave bond and took the oath, appellant's successor had been elected and qualified, and, therefore, his right to the office ceased.

"At the time the Constitution was formed it had long been a settled rule in this State that where the person elected to an office died before qualification, or for any reason failed to qualify, or there was no election to fill the office at the time appointed by law, a vacancy existed. The Constitution not only aims at short definite terms, but it also aims to vest in the people at the expiration of each term the right to choose the incumbents of the offices for the next term, and section 152 was intended to secure this right in all cases where the remainder of the term, in case of a vacancy, was long enough to justify it. In view of all the provisions of the Constitution and the well-settled rule in the State at the time of its adoption, we have no doubt that its framers intended by section 153 to provide for such a contingency as occurred in this case, and that they did not contemplate that the incumbent of an office, in the case of the death of a successor before qualification, should hold for a second term for which he had not been elected."

The other case is Olmstead v. Augustus, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 1773, which is to the same effect, and conclusively settles the issue in this case.

Wherefore, the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

---

DRYE, &c. v. CUNNINGHAM, MEDLEY & CO., &c.

(Filed May 19, 1903—Not to be reported.)

1. Wills—Husband and wife—Trusts—Under the will of G. the testator directed that on the death of his wife his personal estate be divided equally between his three children, and that the share of his daughter be placed in trust for her benefit. She died leaving a husband and children surviving her, and the question involved on this appeal is what the interest of the daughter in said property was. Held—That although said property was held in trust it was evidently the intention of the testator that she was to be the absolute owner of same, and on her death it passed to her husband and was subject to debts incurred during her lifetime, whether they were the debts of the husband or wife, and her children took it subject to those debts.

2. Decedents' estates—Demand—Estoppel—Where heirs have given orders on the executors of an estate for payment of the testator's debts they are estopped to defeat said claims by showing that no demand was made of the executor.

Samuel Avritt for appellants.

I. H. Thurman, J. W. S. Clements and T. Scott Mayes for appellees.

Appeal from Washington Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson.

The first question to be determined in this case is, what interest Susan Tucker took in the personalty devised to her by her father, Charles Grundy, in the following clause of his will: "I wish all my money, including cash and cash notes, to be placed at interest for the benefit of my wife, Miranda Grundy, she to use and dispose of the interest as she may see proper, and at her death the whole principal, including cash and cash notes, to be equally divided among my three children, Thomas S. Grundy, Palmer Grundy and Susan Tucker. It is my wish that the one-third portion of my money coming to my daughter, Susan Tucker, shall be placed in the hands of my brother, Samuel R. Grundy, as trustee for her, and he to manage and control the same, and to pay over to her annually the interest on the same. It is my wish that should he at any time think it necessary to use any portion of the principal for the use and benefit of my daughter, Susan Tucker, he shall have the power to do so. I also will to my daughter, Susan Tucker, and her children, all my undeeded lands, with the exception of a small strip which I have promised to my son, Thomas S. Grundy, commencing at the division line between the lands of Susan Tucker and Thomas S. Grundy and running northwest until it intersects the former line, supposed to be one-half acre, more or less. It is also my wish that my brother, Samuel R. Grundy, as trustee for my daughter, Susan Tucker, to have control of all timber and firewood on above-named land, and it is also my wish that no one be allowed to settle on the said land without the approbation of brother as trustee. I also will to my daughter, Susan Tucker, one brown stallion and one black mare by the name of Puss."

The widow, Miranda Grundy, died many years ago. The one-third of the personal property devised in trust for Susan Tucker was $6,735.76. She was the wife of James H. Tucker, who was insolvent, or practically so. It is insisted that Mrs. Tucker took only a life interest in this fund, on the ground that the trustee was directed to pay over to her annually the interest, and might, in his discretion, use part of the principal if necessary, and stress is laid upon the fact that the next sentence begins with the words, "I also will to my daughter, Susan Tucker, and her children." The testator clearly gave to Miranda Grundy, his wife, only a life estate, because she was authorized to use the interest as she saw proper, and at her death the whole principal was directed to be equally divided between the three children. Thus she was expressly excluded from any interest in the principal of the fund. If the will had stopped here it is clear that Mrs. Tucker and her two brothers would have been put on an equal footing, and that each would have taken absolutely one-third of the principal of the fund at the death of their mother. The next sentence, creating the trust, shows no intention to restrict the estate thus vested in her. The fund was placed in the hands of a trustee for its protection from her improvidence or that of her husband, but nothing further was provided. The daughter was the object of the testator's bounty. The trust was created because she was a married woman, and the testator thought that it was necessary for her protection. Her children are not mentioned in connection with the personalty. It is true they are mentioned in connection with the land, but the devise there is to Mrs. Tucker and her children, and thus the children were made joint tenants with her in the land. That the testator understood that he had created the trust, not for the benefit of the children, is shown by the words directing the fund coming to Susan Tucker to be placed in the hands of "Samuel R. Grundy, as trustee for her," and also by the words empowering him to use the principal, "for the use and benefit of my daughter, Susan Tucker." It is also shown by the fact that Grundy is again mentioned "as trustee of my daughter, Susan Tucker," in the next sentence, and the last sentence of the clause is in these words: "I also will to my daughter, Susan Tucker, one brown stallion and one black mare by the name of Puss." The horses were not placed under the trust. The only thing in the will devised to the children is an interest in the land, and this they took jointly with their mother. There being no limitation upon the estate devised to the daughter and no devise over, it cannot be construed as a life estate merely because the fund was placed in the hands of a trustee. The creation of the trust did not change the character of the estate devised Mrs. Tucker. It was her property held in trust for her. (Webster v. Webster, 93 Ky., 632.)

In Tucker v. Grundy, 83 Ky., 540, the court said that Susan Tucker was entitled beyond question to the interest, at least, on the fund under her father's will, and to have a settlement of the trust. The court refused to discharge the trust, as the husband was then living, and to do so would have defeated the testator's intention. Mrs. Tucker died in the year 1891, and her husband some months later. Before his death he assigned to the children his interest in the fund. When the case was next before this court, in Drye v. Grundy, 18 Ky. Law Rep., 13, the court said: "The personal representative of the deceased husband of Mrs. Tucker should be made a defendant, although it appears his interest was transferred to his children in his lifetime. This he had the power to do. Still his personal representative may contest the transfer, and if he is not a defendant either party may bring him before the court by proper pleading."

On the last appeal of the case (Grundy v. Drye, 20 Ky. Law Rep., 970) the court only considered the question whether the executors were responsible for the funds after the death of Mrs. Tucker, and held that they were because they had not discharged the duties imposed on them by the will. There is nothing in any of these cases intimating that Susan took under the will only a life estate. On the contrary the intimations are otherwise.

On the appeal before us the only question to be determined is whether the court properly allowed the claims of appellees to be paid out of the fund. They allege that their claims were the debts of Susan Tucker. Appellants claim that they were the debts of her husband, James H. Tucker. But whether they were the debts of the husband or the wife is not now material as the fund upon the death of the wife passed to the husband, and when it was voluntarily assigned by him to the children they took it subject to his debts. The orders which were given by the children to appellees on the executors for the payment of their claims were not, therefore, without consideration, and these orders having been accepted by appellees and held by them awaiting a settlement of the accounts of the executors for the accommodation of the estate, the children will not be heard to complain that proper demand was not made of the personal representative of their father, for the giving of the orders they led appellees to understand that no demand need be made on the representative of their father, and they will, not be allowed to complain that a demand was not made when they, by their own act, prevented its being made, and agreed that the debts should be paid out of the fund. The clear equity of the case is with the appellees, and the court properly adjudged that their claims should be paid.

Judgment affirmed.

---

GALLOWAY v. ROWLETT.

(Filed May 20, 1903—Not to be reported.)

1. Execution—Homestead—The only question presented on this appeal is whether appellant, the owner of a homestead, had abandoned same. The proof shows that appellant was shot through the body and was unable to perform physical labor necessary to the cultivation of the farm, and removed from same to town, ten or twelve miles distant, where he could obtain work which he could perform, and rented out the farm to a tenant for two years before an execution was levied on same. Appellant had not acquired another homestead, nor had he determined to abandon his homestead permanently. Held—That appellant had not lost his homestead by abandonment as his removal therefrom was only temporary.

2. Practice—Setting aside execution sale—A motion is a proper remedy to set aside an execution sale of property exempt as a homestead.

John K. Hendrick and W. F. Peterson for appellant.

J. H. Coleman for appellee.

Appeal from Calloway Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson.

The only question in this case is whether appellant has lost the right to his homestead by abandonment. The evidence on the trial was as follows: "Aaron Galloway was sworn, and testified as a witness on his own behalf that he is a housekeeper with a family, and had a wife and others depending upon him for a support, and was a housekeeper and had the same family dependent upon him when he lived upon the land in controversy in this action; that he had resided in this county and upon the land in controversy with his said family for many years, and that the land, as set out and described in his motion herein, was all the land he owned, and that the entire tract of land was not worth exceeding $250; that he resided on said land with his family and occupied it as a homestead up until a little more than two years ago, and at that time he was shot through the body, the ball, as he was informed by his physician, passing through his liver, after which he was unable to do the necessary work on a farm to support himself and family, and rented his farm out and left the tenant in possession and moved to town to seek employment at which he could labor to support his family; that his said farm was about ten or twelve miles from this town where he now resides; that when he left the farm he intended to return to it and live on it with his family as soon as he got able to work it; that he never told any one that he did not intend to return to the farm and live on it, and that he yet intends to move back there and live if the court will let him have it."

The defendant, Lee Rowlett, was then sworn, and introduced as a witness on his own behalf, and testified that he had heard the plaintiff, Aaron Galloway, say on two or three occasions that when he moved away from his farm he never aimed to move back to it any more.

"Monroe Hodge was then sworn, and introduced as a witness, and testified that he had heard Aaron Galloway say that he never intended to move back on the land to live. He also said that his sister, Alice Hodge, was now living on the place as the tenant of the defendant, Lee Rowlett."

The land was levied on under execution on March 30, 1900, and was sold on May 28, 1900. The trial at which the above evidence was given was had on August 17, 1901. It will thus be seen that a little before August, 1899, appellant was shot, and after that became unable to do the necessary work on his farm. In consequence of this he rented his farm out and sought employment at which he could work, intending to return to his farm with his family as soon as he got able to work, according to his testimony. On the other hand, he declared to two persons that he did not intend to return to his farm, but had been away from his farm only a short time when it was levied on under the execution, and had acquired no other home. He undoubtedly had a homestead in the land before he left it, and still has it, unless he lost it by abandonment.

In 15 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, pages 645-646, it is said: "There is some conflict of judicial opinion as to how conclusively the question of intention to abandon must be established. According to some cases the abandonment of the homestead right by removal should be declared only upon clear and decisive proof of an intention to abandon the right. But, according to another line of cases, a removal from the homestead is taken to be as an abandonment unless it clearly appears that there is an intention to return and occupy the premises as a home. Stronger proof of abandonment is required when the debt to which it is sought to subject the land was contracted during actual occupancy than when it was contracted while the homestead was not in actual possession of the premises. * * * While there is some authority for the proposition that a homestead is not abandoned by a removal of the claimant without acquiring a new homestead, that is not the prevailing view. According to the preponderance of authority an actual removal with no intention to return amounts to an abandonment, even when a new homestead has not been acquired. But the fact that the absent claimant has not acquired a home elsewhere is a circumstance which tends to show an intention to return. It has even been said that a homestead will not be considered abandoned before the acquisition of a new one except upon clear and conclusive proof of a removal with an intention not to return."

Again, on page 949, it is said: "The declarations of the owner of homestead property may be given in evidence to establish the intent with which the removal was made. They may be given in evidence to show either an intention to return or an intention not to return. But such declarations are not conclusive either to establish an abandonment or to show that there existed an intention to return and occupy the premises."

In Davis v. Pritchard, 9 Ky. Law Rep., 914, a debtor being in bad health moved from his homestead, intending to return when his health improved, but finding that his health grew worse, sold it to another. In the meantime it had been levied on and sold under execution. It was held that he had not lost his homestead. In Black v. Black, 11 Ky. Law Rep., 378, a lawyer removed from his home in town to a farm in the country, intending to return, but died a year or more later on the farm. It was held that the homestead right had not been lost by abandonment. In McFarland v. Washington, 12 Ky. Law Rep., 376, the debtor owned a home in Owensboro, from which he removed in the spring of 1884, renting land in the country upon which he farmed in the years 1884, 1885 and 1886, and the same rule was followed.

The homestead is created by law for the benefit of the family. The purpose of the statute is to secure the family in a home and protect it from the improvidence of the husband, or head of the family. While he may lose a homestead which he has once acquired by abandonment, the purpose of the statute would be defeated if the homestead was held to be abandoned on slight and inconclusive evidence. Here the debtor had been shot, and was unable to work on his farm. His removal from the farm was by reason of his personal disability, and when he had been away only a short time it was levied on and sold. The only proof that he intended to abandon his homestead are his declarations, as shown by the evidence for appellee, which he denies, and there being nothing in his conduct or situation to sustain these declarations, they are not sufficient alone to establish an abandonment of the homestead. The reason for his removal was that he was unable to work his farm. He had the right under such circumstances to move from his farm, leaving it in the hands of a tenant; and if, under such facts, without any other proof of the abandonment of the homestead, it could be established by loose declarations of the debtor alone, although there was nothing in his conduct to sustain such proof, that class of persons whom the statute was designated primarily to protect might be often denied its benefits.

In Hope v. Hillis, 5 Ky. Law Rep., 319, it was held that a motion was a proper remedy to set aside an execution sale of property exempt as a homestead.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded, with directions to set aside the sale.

---

BEVERLY v. WALLER, &c.

(Filed May 20, 1903.)

Dower—Mortgages—Res judicata—B. and P. were joint owners of a large tract of land. B. mortgaged his interest in said land to W., which appellant, his wife, did not sign. Subsequently he executed a second mortgage to Posey. His wife signed this mortgage, but she was not named anywhere in it. Subsequently the heirs of P. executed a deed of partition, conveying to B. and his wife jointly one-half of said lands. Posey subsequently brought this action to enforce his mortgage. W., the former mortgagor, was made a party defendant, who filed a cross petition setting up his mortgage lien. B. and his wife were duly served with process on the petition and the cross petition. In neither the petition nor the cross petition was any mention made of the inchoate dower interest of appellant. The judgment enforcing the lien of the plaintiff and cross plaintiff upon the land involved in the action does not mention the inchoate dower right of appellant, or in any way seek to sell or bar it. Under this judgment the mortgaged land was sold by the commissioner and appellees are the remote vendees of the purchaser at said sale. Upon the death of B. appellant, his widow, brought this action to recover the value of her vested dower interest therein. The judgment enforcing the mortgage lien was pleaded in bar of said action for dower, which plea was adjudged sufficient on demurrer, and judgment having been rendered against her she has appealed. Held—That said mortgages were insufficient to bar her claim to dower. While the mortgagors could have set up the fact that she was entitled to an inchoate right of dower and the judgment could have provided for same, having failed to do so, she was compelled to set it up. She had only an inchoate right of dower, which might never become vested. If she had set it up in the case it would not have barred the action of the plaintiff and cross plaintiff. They would have been entitled to precisely the same judgment, so far as the sale of the land was concerned, whether her inchoate right of dower was pleaded or not. Said judgment did not bar her claim for dower.

Brown & Vance for appellant.

S. V. Dixon and Yeaman & Yeaman for appellees, M. Young and Lula and Clarence Faulkner.

M. C. & G. D. Givins for appellee Waller.

Montgomery Merritt for appellee, Margaret A. Buckman.

Appeal from Henderson Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

On the 15th day of February, 1868, R. G. Beverly and L. W. Powell were the joint owners of a large tract of land in Henderson county, Kentucky. On that day Beverly mortgaged his undivided interest in the land to James White to secure the repayment of $2,000 in gold. His wife, the appellant, Sarah P. Beverly, did not sign this mortgage, nor is her name in any way mentioned therein.

On the 17th day of July, 1870, R. G. Beverly mortgaged his interest in the land to Thomas Posey, to secure to Posey what he owed him as guardian, and also for the purpose, as recited in the mortgage, of indemnifying W. B. Woodruff and George A. Sugg from liability upon his bond as guardian of Thomas Posey. Appellant's name nowhere appears in the body of this second mortgage, but she signed and acknowledged it before the clerk of the Henderson County Court. On the 16th day of December, 1870, L. W. Powell having died, his heirs entered into deeds of partition with R. G. Beverly of the lands jointly owned by them and him, whereby they conveyed to him, and to his wife, Sarah P. Beverly, one-half of the lands jointly owned.

Afterwards Thomas Posey instituted an action in the Henderson Circuit Court for enforcement of his mortgage lien, making R. G. Beverly and appellant and James White defendants. All were served with process.

White answered, setting up his mortgage, and making his answer a cross petition against Beverly and wife, and prayed for an enforcement of his lien. Both Beverly and appellant were served with process in this cross action.

In neither the original nor the cross petition was any mention made of the inchoate dower interest of appellant. In both of these pleadings it is alleged, in substance, that while in the deed of partition from Powell's heirs the land was conveyed to R. G. Beverly and Sarah P. Beverly, his wife, jointly, yet, as against the mortgagees, the wife had no interest save as the wife of R. G. Beverly, and as to them she was a mere volunteer. Appellant made no answer to these actions, but permitted judgment to go by default. The judgment enforcing the lien of the plaintiff and cross plaintiff upon the land involved [in the action does not mention the inchoate dower right of appellant, or in any way seek to sell or bar it. Under this judgment the mortgaged land was sold by the commissioner of the court, and purchased by Milton Young, and J. W. Buckman, to whom it was conveyed by commissioner's deed, and from whom it has successively devolved by conveyance to the present owners, the appellees in this action.

In 1902 R. G. Beverly died, and his widow, the appellant, Sarah P. Beverly, thereupon instituted this action against the appellees, the owners of the land, to recover of them the value of her now vested dower interest therein. The judgment enforcing the mortgages of Posey and White having been pleaded as a bar to appellant's action for dower, she demurred to the plea, and this having been overruled by the court she declined to plead further, whereupon her petition was dismissed, and she has appealed.

The one question for adjudication on this appeal is whether or not appellant's inchoate right of dower in the land was barred by the judgment rendered, enforcing the mortgage liens of Posey and White. Although appellant signed and acknowledged the mortgage to Posey, as her name does not appear in the body of that instrument she stood toward it as if she had not signed it.

In the case of Hatcher, &c. v. Andrews, 5 Bush, 561, this court said: "The deed of Geiger to Elba Holden, of the two town lots, and through which the title of these vendees is derived, purports a conveyance alone by the husband; but Annie, his wife, signed the deed and acknowledged it, together with her husband, before the county clerk, who certified it, without stating what she intended to convey. * * * The deed from Geiger purports no conveyance of anything from his wife, nor even that she was a party to it, therefore, it is as wholly insufficient as to her as though she had never signed it. Holden is the sole grantor in his deed; and though the wife signed with him the attesting clause of the deed, yet it does not purport, by apt language, to convey any interest on her part, and is wholly insufficient to bar her of a dower right."

Appellees contend that, although appellant's inchoate right of dower was not barred or disposed of in any way by the mortgages, yet because she was made a defendant and properly summoned in the action enforcing the liens, and allowed judgment to go by default, she is barred by that judgment from setting up any claim to dower against the land sold in the action. It is true that, as a general proposition, a judgment against a defendant who has been duly summoned is res adjudicata as to all defenses which either were, or might have been, set up as a bar to the cause of action set forth in the petition. The cases cited by appellant come within this principle. The case of Harpending's Ex'or v. Wiley, 76 Ky., 160, was an action to foreclose a mortgage which had been executed by a husband and wife. Judgment by default was rendered, and the property directed to be sold to satisfy the debt. After the death of the husband, a rule having been awarded against the widow and heirs to show cause why judgment should not be revived, the widow responded that at the time of the execution of the mortgage her husband was a bona fide housekeeper with a family; that he then resided with his family on the mortgaged premises, and continued to reside thereon up to his death, and that the family was still residing thereon; that she had not mortgaged, conveyed, relinquished, released, or in any way disposed of the right of herself and infant children to a homestead, and they asked that a homestead be allotted to them in the property. This court held on appeal that the original judgment necessarily passed upon the validity of the mortgage given by the husband and wife, and that question became res adjudicata; that the wife derived her claim to the homestead through the husband, and not from the statute, and inasmuch as his right of homestead had been adjudged adversely to him in the suit to foreclose the mortgage, he thereby lost it, and at the time of his death he had no homestead in the property.

It is clear that if the husband had a homestead right in the mortgaged premises it was a defense to the action against him, at least to the extent of $1,000, and being defendant, he was required by the rule either to set it up or be barred by the judgment in default.

The case of Hill v. Lancaster, 88 Ky., 338, is to the same effect. Lancaster joined issue upon the merits of an action brought against him to subject his land to the payment of his debts, without claiming a homestead therein. Upon the issue joined the chancellor decided adversely to him, and rendered a judgment subjecting his entire interest in the real estate to the payment of his debts. At a subsequent term he sought to file a petition, in the nature of an answer, setting up his right to a homestead, but the court said that while it was a fact that as against his creditors he was entitled to a homestead in the land, he had defended the claim upon its merits, and failed to set up his homestead right, which would have been a complete bar to the action if the real estate was not worth more than $1,000; and if more than $1,000, then a bar to the extent of $1,000. Not having set up this defense, after judgment the question of homestead was res adjudicata. The same principle is established in the cases of Ligon v. Triplett, 12 B. Mon., 283, and Talbot v. Todd, 5 Dana, 190.

But these cases are not applicable to the principle here involved. The appellant, at the time she was summoned, had only an inchoate right of dower, which might never become vested. If she had set it up in the case it would not have barred the action of the plaintiff and cross plaintiff. They would have been entitled to precisely the same judgment, so far as the sale of the land was concerned, whether her inchoate right of dower was pleaded or not.

Van Fleet, in his work on Former Adjudication, section 191, lays down the rule as follows: "In a suit to foreclose a mortgage signed by the husband alone, the wife was made a party, and the petition alleged that she had an interest in the mortgaged premises, without making any specific reference to dower, and asked that she set out her interest, and prayed for general relief. Other subsequent incumbrances were also made parties. A general decree by default barring all the defendants, but not in terms barring her dower nor mentioning her name, does not foreclose her dower rights. (Parmenter v. Brinkley, 28 Ohio St., 32.) And in a similar case in Iowa, in which a wife did not join in a mortgage, which made it subject to her right of dower, its foreclosure by default, after her husband's death, in a case in which she is simply made a party without mentioning her dower, does not bar it. The court said that if she had joined in the mortgage, or her right to dower had been put in issue, it would have been barred. (Moomey v. Maas, 22 Iowa, 380.) So a bill having been filed in New York to foreclose a mortgage against the widow, which she had not signed, and it being alleged that she was a devisee and executrix, and also the widow of the mortgagor, and that she claimed some interest in the mortgaged premises, as subsequent purchaser, incumbrance, or otherwise, it was held that a decree of foreclosure pro confesso did not bar her dower." (Lewis v. Smith, 11 Barb., 152.)

In Freeman on Judgments, section 305a, it is said: "It seems that an order to conclude the wife's right of dower it must in all cases be necessarily and specifically put in issue whether the proceeding be to foreclose a mortgage to which the wife was not a party, or to enforce any other claim to which her right of dower was paramount." (Maloney v. Horan, 49 N. Y., 115.)

In the case of Maloney v. Horan, above cited, the court, in discussing a principle similar to the one herein, said: "She is bound by the judgment, whatever may be its legitimate effect. The judgment is final and conclusive upon her as to all matters put in issue and litigated in the action. But, as stated above, the matter of her inchoate right of dower was not put in issue and litigated therein. * * * The plaintiff in this action might have raised in that action the question that she had a right of dower, as yet inchoate, but which might become complete; and might have asked that if it should be found to exist, the judgment should make provision therefor. But was she bound to do so? -This would not have been matter in direct opposition to the action in defense to the claim made by plaintiffs therein; it would have been a quasi admission of the cause of action set up, and a seeking for relief in the judgment which must follow. And when the authorities say that a judgment is final and conclusive upon the parties to it as to all matters which might have been litigated and decided in the action, the expression must be limited as applicable to such matters only as might have been used as a defense in that action as against an adverse claim therein, and such matters as if now considered would involve an inquiry into the merits of the former judgment. The existence of an inchoate right of dower in the plaintiff would not have been a defense to the action of the receiver for a sale of the premises and a satisfaction from the avails of the sale of the judgment debt which he represented. It could not, if pleaded and shown, have prevented a judgment substantially that which was rendered. The most which could have been effected would have been to have secured in the judgment an auxiliary provision recognizing and protecting the contingent right. And again, it was a right pre-existent to the claims and defenses there litigated, and paramount to any right of the plaintiff in that action there sought to be enforced. * * * We are of the opinion that the plaintiff is not estopped by the record in the action brought by the receiver."

So in this case the wife might have set up her inchoate dower in the action to foreclose the mortgages, but this would not have been matter in direct opposition to the cause of action made by the plaintiffs therein. Her dower right, if pleaded and shown, could not have prevented a judgment substantially the same as that which was rendered. When appellant was served with summons, if she examined the petition and cross petition she found that, so far as she was concerned, the only allegations of the pleadings were with reference to the questions of her taking a beneficial interest under the deed of partition from Powell's heirs to her husband and herself. These allegations were that, as to the plaintiff and cross plaintiff, she was a mere volunteer, and had no interest in the land save as wife of R. G. Beverly. It must have been evident to her that the only remedy which was sought against her was the denial of her ownership of a beneficial interest in the land. Her inchoate right of dower was as clearly recognized in the pleadings as her beneficial interest, under the deed of partition, was denied.

If appellant had any claim to a vested interest under the deed of partition, it would have constituted a defense to the causes of action set up in the pleadings against her, and as she failed to set up such interest, she was concluded by the judgment rendered. Not so as to her inchoate right of dower; that was clearly recognized, but no pretense was made by the plaintiff and cross plaintiff that their liens on the land were paramount to her dower, and the very fact that they, with their attention directed to the interest of appellant in the land, set up an adverse claim as to her beneficial interest under the deed of partition, and were silent as to any claim of superiority over her dower right warranted her in concluding that no claim adverse to her dower interest was sought in the pleadings against her.

It was obvious that her claim for dower was paramount to the liens sought to be enforced, and it is not lightly to be concluded that the judge who decided the case committed so plain an error as to adjudge the liens in the mortgage superior to her dower right unless the language used was such as to forbid an opposite conclusion.

We do not think the case of Meriwether v. Sebree, 2 Bush, 232, is applicable to the case at bar. In that case the widow's dower had become vested by the death of her husband, and was inferior to the liens upon the land involved for the unpaid purchase money. The estate of her husband was insolvent, and the holders of the vendors' liens were entitled to have the land sold free of any claim of dower as against them. The widow was not entitled, on the merits of the case, to anything but to have her dower assigned to her out of the proceeds of the sale of the land, after the payment of the vendors' liens, and this is what was adjudged to her in the case by this court. Mrs. Meriwether had no interest in the land sought to be subjected to the payment of the debts of her husband except that of dower, and when she was summoned to answer in the case to settle her husband's estate she was bound to know that the administrator of her husband was seeking to sell the land free from her right of dower. There was no other reason for her being made a party to the action.

Not so in the case at bar. Mrs. Beverly was made a party to the action of Posey and White against her husband for the declared purpose of defeating her claim to a beneficial interest in the land under the deed of partition of Powell's heirs, and this being the only purpose appearing for making her a party, she was called on to answer the cause of action set up in the pleadings, and not one which might have been set up against her.

Therefore, the judgment is reversed, with directions to sustain appellant's demurrer to so much of the answers of appellees as set up the judgment in the case of Posey and White against her husband as a bar to her claim for dower in the land involved in this litigation, and for other proceedings consistent with this opinion.

---

O'BRIEN v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed May 20, 1903.)

Criminal law—Accomplices—Evidence—Appellant and his accomplice, Whitney, were jointly indicted for the murder of C., a citizen of Lexington, whose house they had entered with burglarious intent and made demand for his money, and immediately thereafter one or the other of them shot and killed him. Appellant was given a separate trial, and it resulted in his conviction and sentence of death. On appeal he complains of the ruling of the court in admitting evidence showing that two previous burglaries were committed in the neighborhood the same night. Held—That said evidence was competent to show the motive of entering the house of C.; also it was competent to identify the appellant and his accomplice, who made confessions after their arrest, in which they disclosed where pistols stolen by them in the previous burglaries might be found. The officers found the pistols in the places designated in the confession, which were identified by the owners. The conviction was properly found on their confessions as they were corroborated in several particulars, and it was immaterial as to which fired the fatal shot, as the proof showed that they were accomplices.

2. Misconduct of attorney—Appellant complains that his conviction was improper by reason of the court permitting the trial to progress while his attorney was in a state of intoxication. This objection is made for the first time on the motion for a new trial by affidavits filed. This ground can not be considered under section 281, Criminal Code, but had it been properly presented, appellant was not prejudiced by the action of the court, as it did not abuse its discretion in this matter.

W. C. G. Hobbs and J. N. Elliott for appellant.

C. J. Pratt and M. R. Todd for appellee.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

The appellant, Claude O'Brien, and one Earl Whitney were jointly indicted in the Fayette Circuit Court for the murder of A. B. Chinn, a citizen of Lexington, Ky. A separate trial was accorded the appellant at his request, which resulted in his conviction, and the fixing of his punishment at death by the verdict of the jury. His motion for a new trial was overruled by the lower court, hence this appeal.

The facts and circumstances leading to and surrounding the commission of the murder as shown by the record are few and simple. At two and a half or three o'clock a. m., on October 11, 1902, under cover of darkness, the dwelling house of A. B. Chinn was burglariously entered by the appellant, Claude O'Brien, and his accomplice, Earl Whitney; they proceeded at once to the bedroom of Chinn and wife; the latter was awakened by the creaking of the screen door as they entered the room, and she in turn awoke her husband as the intruders, lighting a match, approached the bed in which they were lying. O'Brien and Whitney wore masks, and both raised their pistols as they neared the husband, who was on the outer side of the bed and said: "Your money or your life." In reply to the demand for money both Chinn and wife informed them that they had no money, and never kept any in the house, and the husband then said to them to go and get or find what you want. At this juncture the son, Asa Chinn, who occupied an adjoining room, appeared at the bedroom door of his parents and called "Mama." Upon hearing the voice of the son either O'Brien or Whitney immediately fired at the elder Chinn, who was sitting up in the bed, shooting him through the body. The pistol firing then became general between the intruders and young Chinn, who was in the hall near the door and had dropped upon one knee and commenced shooting at the intruders after the firing of the first shot by one of them in the room. Young Chinn received two wounds himself, one in the right arm, the other in the neck, and fell on the hall floor. O'Brien and Whitney, the latter of whom was wounded in the leg by young Chinn, then made their escape from the house, running over his prostrate body in the hall, followed by the elder Chinn, who fell in the hall near the bedroom door, and immediately died. He, however, informed his wife as he got out of the bed, when the firing ceased, that he had been wounded.

The foregoing facts were testified to by Mrs. Chinn, and were sustained in part by the son, who heard from his room the words "your money or your life," though he did not appear upon the scene until just before the shot which killed his father was fired in the room by either O'Brien or Whitney.

It also appears from the record that the statements of Mrs. Chinn and her son are corroborated by O'Brien and Whitney upon all material points, though they contradict each other in many essential particulars. For instance, while both admit that as they approached the bed of A. B. Chinn and wife the words "your money or your life" were spoken, each testifies that they were uttered by the other. They both also admit that when these words were used the speaker was presenting a pistol at A. B. Chinn, but testified that only one pistol was presented, each claiming that it was presented by the other. Again both admit that when Asa Chinn appeared in the hall at the door of his parents' bedroom, they heard him call to his mother, and that the firing then began, in which one of them shot the elder Chinn, but each lays upon the other the act of shooting.

There is no claim or pretense from any source that the elder Chinn was killed by an accidental shot, or that he was offering any resistance when shot; upon the contrary, the evidence shows beyond all doubt that Asa Chinn was in a position from which it was impossible for his father to have been shot by a stray ball from his pistol, and the fact that the father's night shirt was scorched and his body powder burned, proves that the one who shot him was in the room, and close to him.

The occurrences following the murder, and which led to the subsequent detection and arrest of the criminals, are also few and unmistakably corroborative of what had gone before. Immediately after the murder the guilty parties went to the depot yard of the Southern Railroad, and there placed themselves in an empty freight car, after concealing the pistols with which they had been armed. They were soon thereafter found and arrested by the officers who were in search of the murderers of A. B. Chinn. When they were placed under arrest O'Brien turned to Whitney and said: "Pard, he has got us." In removing the prisoners from the car the officers discovered that their clothing was wet, showing that they had been in the rain of the previous night; they also discovered that Whitney was lame, and in reply to an inquiry as to the cause of his lameness, he said he had hurt his leg upon or against a car, but when an examination of his leg disclosed the bullet wound he then said he had been shot some days previously by a negro at Williamstown. It was likewise discovered by the officers that Whitney and O'Brien had exchanged pants before their arrest, the evident purpose of which was to conceal the former's wound, for in wearing his own pants the presence of the bullet hole in the leg thereof at the point of the wound, in connection with his lameness, might have been expected to lead to the discovery of his wound.

A few days after the arrest both O'Brien and Whitney made what purported to be a full confession of their connection with the murder of A. B. Chinn, in which, as already indicated, each tried to place upon the other the leadership in, and blame for, that crime. By the confession of Whitney the concealment of the pistols with which the shooting at the Chinn home had been done by them was made known, and the pistols were found by the officers at the place designated in the confession. They were three in number. One had been brought by Whitney to Lexington; it was out of repair and practically useless. One of the other two had been taken by O'Brien and Whitney just before the killing of Chinn from the residence of O. L. Slade, and the other from the bedroom of M. C. Alford, in the residence of his sister, Mrs. McConathy. The Slade revolver was a Colt's of bluish finish, and that of Alford was a silver-mounted double-barreled derringer, with a pearl stock or handle. Each pistol was fully identified by its owner. Slade knowing his by its color and a small amount of rust upon it, and Alford recognizing his by its peculiar finish and pattern. Besides, the Slade pistol was also identified by a clerk in the store where it had been purchased, by its number which he had entered at the time of its sale to Slade in a book kept for that purpose. Both pistols were loaded when taken from their respective owners.

Though numerous formal grounds for a new trial were presented in the lower court, only two of them are relied on by counsel for appellant for a reversal. That is to say, it is contended that the lower court erred in admitting on the trial evidence of the burglaries committed by O'Brien and Whitney on entering the houses of Slade and McConathy just before the murder of Chinn, and in permitting the trial of appellant to proceed while his then counsel was in an alleged state of intoxication.

As to the first of these contentions we are of the opinion that evidence of the burglaries was competent, first, as illustrating the motive with which appellant and his accomplice entered the house of A. B. Chinn. They entered the houses of two of his neighbors, committing a theft in each, only a few minutes before entering his; their mission on that night was theft and robbery and such, therefore, was their motive and purpose in entering the house of Chinn; second, the evidence was competent as a means of identifying the guilty parties. The identification was made through the pistols which they had stolen from the houses of Slade and Mrs. McConathy, the latter being a sister of Alford, owner of one of the pistols. The pistols were found through the confession of Whitney, who also told where they had been stolen by himself and appellant, and proof of the burglaries was competent, therefore, to corroborate Whitney's confession as well as the testimony given by him on the trial of appellant, and to corroborate Slade and Alford in their identification of the pistols, which identification in turn fastened the guilt of Chinn's murder upon the parties found in possession of the pistols. The trial court, following section 241 of the Criminal Code, very properly told the jury that they "could not convict appellant upon the testimony of Earl Whitney alone, unless such testimony was corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the appellant with the commission of the offense charged in the indictment, and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows that the offense charged was committed and the circumstances thereof."

In order for the State to make out its case against appellant corroboration of Whitney's testimony was necessary, and that corroboration was found in the finding of the pistols in the place of concealment testified to by Whitney and in the identification of the pistols by Slade and Alford, who told of the burglaries by way of explaining the manner in which they were deprived of the possession of them, and in doing so furnished evidence of the motive which actuated the guilty parties in breaking into the house of A. B. Chinn.

Bishop's New Criminal Procedure, volume 1, section 1126, in discussing the admissibility of such evidence as that under consideration, says: "The intent, knowledge, or motive under which the defendant did the act charged against him, not generally admitting of other than circumstantial evidence, may often be aided in the proofs by showing another crime, actual or attempted; then it is permissible."

Again, in section 1125, same volume, we find the following statement: "Whole transaction, as explained under the doctrine of res gestæ, wherever a part of a transaction appears in evidence the rest is thereby made admissible. So that the entire transaction, wherein it is claimed, the wrong in issue was done, may be shown though it includes also other crimes, and even though each transaction was a continuing one, or transpiring in parts on different days."

The same doctrine is recognized in Greenleaf on Evidence, volume 1, section 53, wherein it is said: "In some cases, however, evidence has been received of facts which happened before or after the principal transaction, and which had no direct or apparent connection with it; and, therefore, their admission might seem at first view to constitute an exception to this rule. But those will be found to have been cases in which the knowledge or intent of the party was a material fact, on which the evidence, apparently collateral and foreign to the main subject, had a direct bearing, and was, therefore, admitted." * * * Again, in volume 3, section 15, we find this further statement from the same learned author: "In the proof of intention it is not always necessary that the evidence should apply directly to the particular act, with the commission of which the party is charged; for the unlawful intent in the particular case may well be inferred from a similar intent, proved to have existed in other transactions done before or after that time." * * *

We find that this court has in more than one case given its sanction to the rule announced in the foregoing authorities. In Tye v. Commonwealth 3 Ky. Law Rep., 59, it is said: "It was proper to allow the Commonwealth to prove the number of attempts by the defendant to commit the same offense, for the purpose of establishing the alleged identity of the accused." * * *

In Thomas v. Commonwealth, 1 Ky. Law Rep., 122, appellant was on trial for effecting an entrance into a dwelling with the intention of stealing. Previously a store had been broken into and goods stolen, and the manner in which the entrance was effected gave strong evidence that the appellant was concerned in the prior breaking into the store. Evidence of the first breaking was admitted to show the appellant's intention to steal in entering the house. Held—"That in admitting such evidence of the first breaking, the court did not assume that the appellant was guilty of that crime; but the evidence was such as to warrant the court in allowing the facts to go to the jury—not as evidence that the appellant broke into the store, for that was abundantly proved without—but as evidence of his intention; and such evidence was properly admitted for that purpose." * * *

We are unable to see that the cases of Martin v. Commonwealth, 93 Ky., 192, and Bishop v. Commonwealth, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 1161, sustain the position assumed by counsel for appellant. Upon the trial of Martin for the purpose of showing a motive on his part for taking the life of one Burk, the fact that Burk had procured an indictment against him for robbery was permitted by the trial court to be shown by the production and reading to the jury of the indictment, and the entire record, including certain affidavits for a continuance, and by detailed proof from witnesses as to the facts of the robbery, all without any direction or instruction from the court telling the jury for what purpose the evidence might be considered by them. This action of the lower court was held by this court to be erroneous and prejudicial to the appellant, because it in effect put him on trial for two offenses at one and the same time; but it was also said by the court that "motive may be shown in certain cases by a state of facts conducing to make out another and distinct offense from that for which the accused is being tried;" and further, that the showing of such motive would have been proper in Martin's case by the introduction of the indictment with the name of Burk on it as a witness, to show that it had been procured by Burk.

The case of Bishop bears a striking resemblance to the one at bar. Bishop shot and killed an officer who was trying to arrest him for the murder of another person whom he had killed but an hour before. On his trial for the murder of the officer testimony was introduced as to the previous killing. Upon appeal to this court it was urged that its introduction was erroneous, and greatly prejudicial to him. But this court, in passing upon the question, said: "It was competent to establish any fact which tended to show motive on the part of the accused, and to make plain to the jury the relations which existed between the accused and the officer at the time the homicide was committed. * * * In establishing the fact of the killing it was. impossible to avoid proving some of the details. * * * Of course it was essential that the jury be told that the killing at the 'lagoon' was not evidence to establish guilt under the indictment upon which appellant was being tried, but was only evidence to show why the appellant was on the car, and to establish motive for the homicide. This the trial judge repeatedly and with exemplary care explained to the jury. * * * It is perhaps unfortunate for the appellant that the first homicide was so interwoven with the second as to furnish a motive. It was for that purpose, and that purpose only, competent." * * *

It appears from the record in the case that the trial judge in apt language, and with great explicitness, explained to the jury that proof of the burglaries committed by appellant and Whitney previous to the killing of Chinn furnished no evidence of their guilt under the indictment for murder upon which they were being tried, but was only evidence to show the intent or motive with which appellant entered the house of Chinn, and could be considered by them for no other purpose. In view of this action of the court, and of the authorities in the opinion cited, we conclude that no error was committed in permitting the introduction of the evidence as to the burglaries committed by appellant and Whitney previous to the killing of Chinn.

We now come to the consideration of the only remaining question presented in appellant's behalf, viz., the alleged misconduct of counsel by whom he was represented upon the trial in the court below. It appears that the attorney who conducted the defense in that court was employed by the appellant's mother, through the assistance of a priest of Louisville, Ky. It is not urged against the attorney that he is deficient in legal learning or lacking in experience. It is claimed, however, that he was so under the influence of intoxicants during the progress of the trial as to interfere in part, at least, with the discharge of his duty to his client, and that when the case was ready for argument to the jury he was not in condition to proceed with the argument, for which reason it was deferred by the court until the following day, when he appeared and addressed the jury, but left the city of Lexington after the conclusion of the argument. These alleged facts do not appear from the record of the trial, but altogether from the affidavits of appellant, his brother, and one other person, which were filed in support of the motion and grounds for a new trial. So we find that the alleged misconduct of the appellant's counsel was brought to the attention of the lower court for the first time in the motion for a new trial, and by section 281, Criminal Code, it is provided that such errors as are presented for the first time in the motion for a new trial are not subject to exception, nor can they be considered by this court. It would seem, therefore, that this court is without power to review the action of the lower court in refusing a new trial upon the ground now urged by appellant. (Kennady v. Commonwealth, 14 Bush, 340; Brown v. Commonwealth, 14 Bush, 398.)

While section 11, Bill of Rights, Constitution of Kentucky, provides that "in all criminal proceedings the accused has the right to be heard by himself and counsel," * * * it is his right to select his counsel. The court may appoint counsel for him, and must do so where a felony is charged, if he fails to select or employ one of his own choosing. But in this case the appellant had counsel of his own, or of his mother's selection. The court had the right to assume in the absence of complaint from him that he was satisfied with his counsel, and it is well-nigh incredible that he and his elder brother, who was with him throughout the trial, should have suffered the alleged misconduct of his counsel to the extent set forth in their affidavits without complaint to the court, when such complaint would have resulted in the appointment by the court of other or assistant counsel to represent him, as was done after the departure of the counsel who conducted the defense upon the trial before the jury.

It does not appear from the affidavits as to the alleged misconduct of appellant's counsel that he was unfit to conduct the examination of appellant's witnesses, or the cross-examination of those introduced by the Commonwealth. Upon the contrary, the bill of evidence shows that that work was efficiently performed by the counsel. If, as stated in the affidavits, though that fact does not appear from the court proceedings, the court was adjourned for a day to enable appellant's counsel to get in proper condition to address the jury, we must take it for granted that if at any other time during the trial his condition had been such as to convince the trial judge that he was too much intoxicated to properly represent his client, he would have suspended the trial for the time being to enable him to become duly sober.

The record manifests the admirable care, ability and fairness with which the case was conducted by the trial judge, and we are unable to find in it any convincing evidence that he suffered such misconduct on the part of appellant's counsel as is complained of.

The instructions to the jury clearly and fairly presented the whole law applicable to the case, and the evidence established beyond all reasonable doubt the appellant's guilt. It is immaterial whether the shot which deprived A. B. Chinn of his life was fired by appellant or Whitney. According to the evidence they were accomplices in the perpetration of the crime, and both present when it was committed, and if so they are equally guilty.

Great stress has been placed by counsel upon appellant's youth. Whether he is fifteen years of age, as he testified upon the trial, or seventeen, as he informed the officers when arrested, it is a matter of profound regret that one so young should come to such an untimely end, but the atrocity of the crime with which he is charged, and the circumstances attending its perpetration, left no hope of his being visited with anything less than capital punishment at the hands of the jury. And as, upon the whole case, we find no error of law by which the substantial rights of the appellant have, in our opinion, been prejudiced, it is our painful, though imperative, duty to sustain the judgment of conviction, and it is hereby affirmed.

---

FRAZER v. FRAZER, &c.

(Filed May 20, 1908—Not to be reported.)

Wills—Under the will of F. his son was vested with the use and enjoyment of one-fifth of the estate until his son, J., should arrive at the age of twenty-one years, and the son of testator had authority, by will, to dispose of this interest to his wife until the arrival at the age of twenty-one years of his child.

Wm. A. Byrne for appellant.

M. C. Swinford and O'Neal & O'Neal for appellees.

Appeal from Harrison Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Burnam.

The will of N. W. Frazer was probated by the Harrison County Court in 1897, and that of his son, W. D. Frazer, in January, 1900. When N. W. Frazer's will was probated D. W. Frazer was a widower with one child, Jesse W. Frazer. After the death of his father W. D. Frazer married the appellant, Jane B. Frazer, who survived him. And we are asked upon this appeal to decide what interest the appellant, Jane B. Frazer, and the appellee, Jesse W. Frazer, took in certain property devised in the fifth and sixth clauses of the will of N. W. Frazer and in the will of W. D. Frazer. The clauses in the will of N. W. Frazer involved upon this appeal reads as follows:

"5th. To my son, William Frazer, I specifically bequeath any and all thoroughbred and trotting stock that I may own, but this does not include any common stock. I also give and devise to my son, William, one-fifth part of my estate, and he is also to have the use and benefit of the remaining one-fifth part, which is to be invested as hereinafter provided until his son, Jesse, arrives at the age of twenty-one years, at which time the said one-fifth part of my estate is to be turned over to my grandson, Jesse. Should my son, William, die without leaving any child or children, his interest in my estate is to be equally divided between his sisters, the said interest to be held for them under the same conditions and limitations hereinbefore set forth. Should my son marry again and leave child or children by said marriage, the children of that marriage are to receive the one-fifth part of my estate hereinbefore bequeathed William, but Jesse is to have the one-fifth part absolutely when he reaches the age of twenty-one years.

"6th. To my grandson, Jesse Frazer, I specifically bequeath my gold watch and chain, and also my scholarship in the Midway Orphans' Home. I also give and bequeath him, when he arrives at the age of twenty-one, the one-fifth part of my estate above referred to. I direct my son, William, to invest this one-fifth part of my estate in good land or property, the proceeds of which he is to enjoy until Jesse is twenty-one years of age."

The one-fifth interest devised to W. D. Frazer until Jesse arrived at the age of twenty-one years was invested in accordance with the terms of the will. W. D. Frazer bequeathed all of his interest and rights in the property devised by N. W. Frazer to Jesse Frazer to the appellant, Jane B. Frazer.

Jesse W. Frazer, by his statutory guardian, instituted this suit in the Harrison Circuit Court against the appellant, Jane B. Frazer, setting out these clauses in the will of his grandfather, and claimed that his father, W. D. Frazer, took a life estate in the one-fifth interest devised to him by the will of his grandfather, and that upon his death he was entitled to be put in possession of the property. The circuit judge decided that upon the death of W. D. Frazer all rights which he had in the lands or estate of Jesse W. Frazer obtained under the will of N. W. Frazer ceased, and that the appellant, Jane B. Frazer, took nothing by virtue of the devise made to her by the will of W. D. Frazer, and she has appealed.

In our opinion W. D. Frazer was under the will of his father, N. W. Frazer, entitled to the use of the one-fifth interest in controversy until his son, Jesse, became twenty-one years of age; and that he could use and dispose of this interest in the same way as any other property owned by him; and that his son, Jesse W. Frazer, took a vested interest in remainder, which took effect at the termination of the particular estate for years devised to his father, W. D. Frazer. It is wholly immaterial whether the particular estate which precedes a vested remainder should be an estate for life or an estate for years, both are well defined and recognized interests in real estate. (2 Blackstone's Com., 166; 2 Minor, 330.)

There is no intimation in the will of N. W. Frazer that he intended that the particular estate given to W. D. Frazer in the estate in controversy should be for life; on the contrary, with great clearness and precision, he says that he is to have the use of it only until Jesse arrives at twenty-one years of age. The appellant, Jane B. Frazer, as devisee of her husband, W. D. Frazer, is entitled to the use and enjoyment of this one-fifth interest until Jesse arrives at twenty-one years of age.

For reasons indicated the judgment is reversed and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

---

CUMBERLAND TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH CO. v. WARE'S ADM'X.

(Filed May 20, 1903.)

Negligence—Instructions—Pleading—This action was instituted by appellee to recover damages for the death of her intestate, who was in the employ of appellant in the construction of its line of telephone. Appellant came to his death by a wire which he was putting up coming in contact with an electric light wire through the act of a party in charge of the work. The action was brought jointly against W. & Co., who made the contract with the city for the construction of an electric light plant, and against appellant, a telephone company. The city was made a defendant, and a verdict was rendered against appellant, but in favor of W. & Co., and the city. The recovery was sought against the three defendants upon the ground that the electric light wire was not properly insulated, and the telephone company being aware of the fact, was guilty of negligence in allowing its wire to come in contact with it. The petition was amended, and plaintiff pleaded in the alternative, that if the electric light wire was properly insulated then the telephone company was guilty of negligence on account of the manner in which it pulled its wire over and against the electric light wire, and thus causing the death. A verdict and judgment was rendered against appellant, but in favor of the electric light company and the city. On appeal it is insisted that the petition is not good, and that a cause of action can not be maintained because the defendants were not joint tortfeasors. Held—That the defendants were properly joined as the law is settled that where several persons jointly commit a tort, the injured party has his election to sue all or some of them separately. It is insisted that the court improperly defined the degree of care required of the electric light company and the city in stringing and maintaining its wires upon the streets of the city. Held—That appellant can not complain of any error in instructions defining the degree of care required of the electric light company and the city, as it was not prejudicial to appellant. The court properly instructed the jury that appellee was entitled to recover, although the deceased knew of the dangerous condition of the electric light wire, if his death was caused by the negligent act of one in charge of the work and superior to deceased.

2. Panel of the jury—Appellant claims that he was prejudiced by being denied the right to a separate panel of the jury. Held—That section 2267, Kentucky Statutes, does not contemplate that where there are a plurality of plaintiffs and defendants that a greater number than eighteen names shall at first be drawn from the box, and there is but one party litigant, although there are a plurality of plaintiffs, and they can challenge no more than three jurors.

Sweeney, Ellis & Sweeney, W. S. Morrison, C. M. Finn, Watkins & Thompson, William D. Granberry and Humphrey, Burnett & Humphrey for appellant.

Wilfred Carrico and Birkhead & Clements for appellee.

Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Paynter.

This action was instituted by the appellee against the city of Owensboro, Westinghouse, Church, Kerr & Co. and Cumberland Telephone and Telegraph Co., to recover damages for the death of her intestate, Thomas Ware. A recovery was sought against the appellants because of the alleged concurring negligent acts of each, which caused his death. The city of Owensboro had made a contract with Westinghouse, Church, Kerr & Co. to construct an electric light plant in the city. The work had progressed, poles had been erected, wires were strung and charged with electricity. The Cumberland Telephone and Telegraph Co. was engaged in stringing a wire along Ann street, in the city of Owensboro, from its exchange building to the Messenger office, to do which it required a wire to be placed upon the cross arms of its poles along Ann street, which wires were elevated above the electric light wires which crossed that street. There were two poles south of the electric light wires. The decedent ascended the first pole, carrying up a wire to which was attached a rope. He threw it over the cross arm and dropped an end of the rope to the ground, whereupon Tom Potts, another employe, took it and ascended the next pole and did likewise; whereupon Lee, who was in charge of the force, took it up and threw it over the electric light wires; and he then took hold of the rope with the wire attached and pulled it across the electric light wires. While pulling it over the electric light wires it came in contact with them, thereby becoming charged with electricity, and as a result Ware was instantly killed. The testimony tends to show that the rope attached to the wire was too short to enable them to carry the wire from the pole up which Tom Potts had ascended to the next pole to which it was to be attached, which had been ascended by Jug Potts, another employe. The handling of the rope was done in such a way that the jury was authorized to conclude that the wire was brought in contact with the electric light wires as the result of Lee's negligence. The plaintiff sought to recover against the three defendants upon the ground that the electric light wire was not.

properly insulated; and the telephone company being aware of that fact, was guilty of negligence, in allowing its wire to come in contact with it. By an amended petition the plaintiff pleaded in the alternative that if the electric light wire was properly insulated, then the telephone company was guilty of negligence on account of the manner in which it pulled its wire over and against the electric light wire, and thus caused Ware's death. The trial resulted in a verdict for the city of Owensboro and Westinghouse, Church, Kerr & Co. and a verdict against the appellant.

It is urged that the petition is not good, and that a cause of action can not be maintained because the defendants were not joint tortfeasors. If the city of Owensboro and Westinghouse, Church, Kerr & Co. strung an electric light wire and left it remaining without proper insulation, and the telephone company negligently brought its wire in contact with the electric light wire, then concurring negligent acts produced Ware's death; and under the doctrine of Pugh v. C. & O. R. R. Co., 19 Ky. Law Rep., 149, an action can be maintained against one or against all of the defendants. Where several persons jointly commit a tort, the injured party has his election to sue all or some of the parties jointly, or some of them separately. (Buckles, &c. v. Lambert, 4 Met., 330; Hill & Bergen v. Harris, 4 Bush, 450; Swigert, &c. v. Graham, 7 B. M., 661.) If the city of Owensboro and Westinghouse, Church, Kerr & Co., strung an electric light wire which was not properly insulated, it was guilty of negligence and their negligent act continued and was as effective in the production of the death of Ware at the time the telephone wire came in contact with it as it would have been had the telephone wire been strung at the same instant the electric light wire was and the contact had then produced his death. If the electric light wire was not properly insulated, the city of Owensboro and Westinghouse, Church, Kerr & Co. were wrongdoers continuously until the act which resulted in the death of Ware. Their act in maintaining the wire necessarily concurred with the act of the telephone company in producing the death of Ware.

Again, it is urged that the petition is not good in stating a cause of action in the alternative, because appellant claims that it is not averred that the pulling and drawing the telephone wire over the electric light wire was carelessly and negligently done. When the whole petition is taken together, we think these averments are sufficiently made. Under the instructions no recovery could have been had except the jury believed that such pulling was carelessly and negligently done. Before entering upon the consideration of the question as to whether the court erred in giving instructions to the jury, it may be said that if it gave an instruction more favorable to the city of Owensboro and Westinghouse, Church, Kerr & Co. then they were entitled to receive as against the plaintiff, that fact could not be a prejudicial error for which appellant can complain. Although they were thereby permitted to escape a recovery against them, appellant's liability for its tort still remained.

The appellant complains of instruction No. 6, which reads as follows: "The court instructs the jury that, as a matter of law, the city of Owensboro had the right to construct and maintain an electric system for lighting its streets, but it was bound to use the highest degree of care, reasonably practicable, to have its wires perfectly insulated so as to be free from danger at all points where persons, in the course of business or pleasure, might come in contact with them; and if the jury believe from the evidence that its wires at the point of contact with the Cumberland Telephone and Telegraph Co. were so insulated, and that the defendant, Cumberland Telephone and Telegraph Co., by its servants and agents, negligently and careless forcibly dragged its wires across the electric light wire, and so broke the insulation on the city's wire, and thereby caused the death of plaintiff, the jury should, if they find for the plaintiff at all, find against the Cumberland Telephone and Telegraph Co. only, and in favor of the other defendants."

It is criticised because it is claimed the petition did not charge that the servants and agents did negligently and carelessly drag its wire across the electric light wire. Again, that the court did not properly define the degree of care which the electric light company and the city should have exercised in stringing and maintaining its wires upon the streets of Owensboro. The first criticism has been hereinbefore disposed of and the second has been substantially so. Any error which the court may have committed in defining the degree of care which should have been exercised in stringing and maintaining electric light wires can not be complained of by the appellant for the reasons hereinbefore given. Besides, if they were properly insulated, under this instruction there could have been no recovery against the appellant unless the jury believe that the death resulted by the negligence of the appellant's agents and servants in drawing its line over the electric light wires.

Appellant complains of instruction No. 13, which reads as follows: "Though the jury believe from the evidence that the electric light wires were not perfectly insulated, if they further believe from the evidence that the agents and servants of the Cumberland Telephone and Telegraph Co., handling the wire by which plaintiff was killed (if he was so killed), including deceased, knew or had notice of the danger of bringing their wire in contact with the city's wires, and they might, by reasonable care, have avoided such contact, and they negligently brought into such contact and but for such negligence the plaintiff would not have been killed; if the jury find for the plaintiff they should find against said telephone and telegraph company alone, and in favor of the other defendants."

The appellant erroneously assumes that the court in this instruction told the jury to find against it, although Ware knew of the defect in the electric light wire, and with such knowledge, by his own negligence, brought the telephone wire in contact with the defective electric light wire. The court in this instruction does not tell the jury to find for the plaintiff, but in effect told it that if it found for the plaintiff it could only find against the appellant.

This instruction was given upon the idea that there could be no recovery against the city of Owensboro and Westinghouse, Church, Kerr & Co. if the agents of the appellant handling the wire by which plaintiff's intestate was killed knew or had notice of the danger of bringing the wire in contact with the electric light wire, and might, by the exercise of reasonable care, have avoided it. Of course if Ware knew that the electric light wire was not properly insulated, and he could have avoided, by the exercise of proper care, the bringing of the telephone wire in contact with the electric light wire, and negligently did so, and but for which the accident would not have happened, the plaintiff could not have recovered. However, plaintiff would have been entitled to a recovery against appellant had Lee, who was in charge of the force, known of the condition of the electric light wire and carelessly and negligently brought the telephone wire in contact with it, thus producing Ware's death. Again, it is urged that the instruction given by the court authorized the jury to find against the appellant, although the negligent act which resulted in the death of the plaintiff was that of a fellow servant. By instruction No. 1 the jury could not have found against appellant unless it believed Ware's death was produced by the negligent act of a person in charge of the work, etc. In instruction No. 2 the jury was expressly told that the company was not liable for the negligent act of a fellow servant. By the third instruction the court submitted to the jury the question as to whether or not Rufus Lee was Ware's superior in authority, and had the right to direct him. In view of these instructions instruction No. 4, of which complaint is made, could not have been misleading, although the word occasional should not have been used in the instruction. It reads as follows: "The court further instructs the jury that the rule of law is that when one engages in the service of another he undertakes, as between himself and his employer, to run all the ordinary risks incident to such service, and that includes the occasional carelessness, negligence and unskillfulness of his fellow servants engaged in the same line of duty; and if the jury believe from the evidence that the plaintiff, while in the employment of the defendant, Cumberland Telephone and Telegraph Co., when he was killed while in the discharge of his duty as such employe, and if the jury further believe from the evidence that his death was occasioned either by his own negligence or want of skill, or that of a fellow servant, engaged in the same line of duty or service as explained in these instructions, and without which he would not have been killed, they should find for the defendants."

Besides, under this instruction the jury is expressly told that the plaintiff could not recover if the death was occasioned by "fellow servants engaged in the same line of duty or service as explained in these instructions."

Counsel for the appellant contended that the appellant's negligence was not a proximate cause of Ware's death. Except for the act of Rufus Lee, in bringing the telephone wire in contact with the electric light wire, Ware would not have been injured by the current of electricity which it carried. It was the current of electricity which produced the death. The efficient cause of the death was put in operation by the negligent act of Lee in bringing the telephone wire in contact with the electric light wire, and necessarily that act was a proximate cause of the death. Appellant filed its affidavit, stating its defense was in conflict with and unfriendly to that of its two co-defendants. Thereupon, it demanded the panel of the jury, and asked the privilege of striking three names therefrom as peremptory challenges. The question of peremptory challenges is controlled by our statute.

In section 2258, Kentucky Statutes, it is provided that "each party litigant in civil actions shall have the right of peremptory challenges to three jurors, and the right to challenge as now allowed by law."

Section 2267, Kentucky Statutes, provides that "In all civil cases of jury trial the clerk shall draw from the box the names of eighteen of the jury, and write them, as drawn, on two slips of paper, and deliver one to each party, from which plaintiff and defendant may each strike three and return the list to the clerk, who shall call the first twelve names not erased and swear them as a jury to try the case." * * *

It will be observed that the statute only contemplated that the names of eighteen of the jury shall be drawn from the box. It evidently does not contemplate that where there are a plurality of plaintiffs and of defendants that a greater number than eighteen names shall at first be drawn from the box. In Sodousky. &c. v. McGee, 4 J. J. M., 267, it was held that if there be a plurality of plaintiffs, they are only one party litigant and can challenge no more than three jurors. The same is true of defendants. The words "party litigant" appeared in the statute then under consideration as in the present statute. In construing them the court said: "The parties litigant mean the antagonistic sides of the controversy. If there be a plurality of plaintiffs, they are all only one party litigant. So a plurality of defendants constitute one, and but one, party to the suit."

The judgment is affirmed.

---

WHITNEY v. COMMONWEALTH.

(Filed May 20, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Criminal law—Evidence—Confession—Appellant prosecutes this appeal from a judgment of conviction and sentence of death. He was indicted with O'Brien for the assassination of Chinn after the commission of a burglary, but was given a separate trial. One of the grounds relied upon for a new trial is that the court erred in admitting evidence of other burglaries committed on the same night. Held—That such evidence was competent to show the motive with which they entered the house of Chinn; also for the purpose of identifying the parties who committed the previous burglaries as the slayers of Chinn. The court properly instructed the jury that such evidence could be considered only for the purpose of showing the motive with which they entered the Chinn residence. It was not prejudicial error to admit the confession made by appellant, as it was substantially the same as his testimony given on his trial. Said confession, or a part thereof, was properly admitted in evidence for another reason, that it corroborated other facts received in evidence, viz., the finding and subsequent finding of the pistols, with one of which Chinn was killed; the consequent proof of the motive for entering Chinn's house, and the identity of the persons who committed the theft of the pistols with the persons who committed the homicide.

2. Accomplices—Instructions—The court properly authorized a conviction of appellant upon proof that the parties were accomplices, aiders and abettors, and the jury properly found appellant guilty, although it was not proven which fired the fatal shot.

8. Inproper argument of Commonwealth's attorney—Although the attorney for the Commonwealth in his argument to the jury may have used improper language, yet it was not prejudicial as the court properly admonished the jury to disregard same.

B. T. Southgate and Chas. Kerr for appellant.

C. J. Pratt and M. R. Todd for appellee.

Appeal from Fayette Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Settle.

The appellant, Earl Whitney, together with Claude O'Brien, was indicted, tried and convicted in the Fayette Circuit Court for the murder of A. B. Chinn, a Lexington merchant. His trial was separate from that of his alleged accomplice, O'Brien, and his plea, like that of the latter, was not guilty, but by the verdict of the jury his punishment was fixed, as was that of O'Brien, at death. From the judgment of conviction and the refusal of the lower court to grant him a new trial he prosecutes this appeal.

It is not deemed necessary to here enter upon a recital of the facts and circumstances connected with the revolting crime of which he, as one of the perpetrators, stands convicted, as they are minutely set forth, and exhaustively discussed in the opinion of this court in the case against Claude O'Brien, ante, 2511, this day handed down, to which opinion reference is here made. It is sufficient to say that the evidence heard upon the trial of appellant shows beyond doubt that A. B. Chinn was foully assassinated in his bedroom, on the morning of October 11, 1902, while it was yet dark, by a pistol shot received at the hands of either the appellant, Earl Whitney, or his accomplice, Claude O'Brien, both of whom were present at the time, armed with pistols, having shortly theretofore entered the dwelling house of Chinn upon a mission of theft and robbery.

The only question of doubt in the case is as to which of the accused fired the shot that killed Chinn. The only persons able to name the one by whom the fatal shot was fired are Whitney and O'Brien, each of whom claims that it was done by the other. But be that as it may, both are, under the evidence, guilty, because they were accomplices, each aiding and abetting the other in the assassination, as in the lawless enterprise which led to that act.

O'Brien, though introduced by appellant's counsel in this case, refused to testify, but proof of a conversation that occurred between him and appellant, after the latter's confession to the officers, was made in this case, which did not differ materially from the testimony given by O'Brien upon his own trial. It is contended by counsel for appellant that the judgment of conviction should be reversed for the reasons, first, that it was error to admit upon the trial evidence of the burglary of the houses of Slade and Mrs. McConathy; second, to admit as evidence the confessions of appellant; third, to allow the Commonwealth's attorney to make certain alleged statements in argument which were not supported by evidence.

The question raised by the first of the foregoing grounds we have already decided in the case of Claude O'Brien v. Commonwealth, supra, which decision is against the contention of appellant's counsel, and we are still of opinion that it was competent to admit proof of the burglaries committed by appellant and O'Brien just previous to the homicide, first, as showing the motive with which they entered the house of Chinn; and, second, for the purpose of identifying the parties who committed the previous burglaries as the slayers of Chinn. In this case, as in that of O'Brien, the trial judge carefully instructed the jury that evidence of the burglaries committed by the appellant and O'Brien before entering the house of Chinn could be considered by them only for the purpose of showing the motive with which they entered the Chinn residence, and should not be considered for any other purpose.

We are likewise of the opinion that no error was committed by the lower court in admitting the confession of appellant. It is shown by the evidence that one Irvine, a Nashville detective, who seems to have known appellant in Nashville, interviewed him after his arrest, and among other things said to him: "Earl, it looks like they have a strong case against you. You are in bad. The truth won't hurt," and that as a result of these statements appellant expressed his willingness to make confession, which he did after others had been called in by Irvine to hear it.

The confession was made in the presence of four persons, one a stenographer. It was reduced to writing and signed by appellant, and this written confession was read upon the trial, it being admitted by counsel for appellant that those who heard the confession would testify that it was made as contained in the writing.

A confession of the accused out of court is competent evidence against him, although it may have been procured by deception, but is incompetent if procured by promises, threats, or advice of the prosecutor, or officer having him in charge, or one having him in duress, or having authority over him, and as said in Roberson's Kentucky Criminal Law and Procedure, section 962: "Before the confessions of one charged with the crime are admissible in evidence against him it must be shown that such confessions are freely and voluntarily made. It is the province of the court to determine whether they were so made, and as to their admissibility. As the facts and circumstances attending each confession are different, no rule can be stated as to just what will render the confession voluntary."

It appears from the record that the trial judge before permitting the introduction of proof of the confession made by appellant instituted a critical investigation of the circumstances attending the making of the confession, causing those present at the time to testify with reference thereto, with the result that it was declared admissible and was permitted to be proved. Notwithstanding the great care exercised by the lower court in inquiring into the circumstances under which the confession was made by appellant, we would be inclined to declare it inadmissible but for the fact that it was in substance repeated by appellant when introduced as a witness in his own behalf upon the trial of this case, and also in testifying as a witness upon the trial of O'Brien. "Although an original confession may have been obtained by improper means, yet subsequent confessions of the same or like facts may be admitted if the court believes from the length of time intervening, or from proper warning of the consequences of confession, or from other circumstances, that the delusion, hopes or fears under which the original confession was obtained were entirely dispelled." (Laughlin v. Commonwealth, 18 Ky. Law Rep., 640.)

It appears that the testimony of appellant as a witness in this case, and that of O'Brien, was given several days after his written confession was made, and if the confession was superinduced by improper influences, they ought to have been, and perhaps were, dispelled by the solemn realities of the trial, and the sanctity of the oath which the appellant took upon entering the witness box. But if it were clear to our minds that the confession resulted from improper influences, its exclusion as a whole is forbidden in this case by a well-known rule of law. "Although confessions improperly obtained are inadmissible, yet any facts which are brought to light in consequence of such confessions, and so much of the confession as is corroborated by these facts, may be received in evidence." (Roberson's Criminal Law and Procedure, volume 2, section 960; Jackson v Commonwealth, 18 Ky. Law Rep., 795; Jane v. Commonwealth, 2 Met., 31; Rector v. Commonwealth, 80 Ky., 468.)

Applying that rule to the evidence in this case, we find the following facts were brought to light by the confession of appellant. The finding and subsequent identification of the pistols with one of which A. B. Chinn was killed; the consequent proof of the motive with which Chinn's house was entered; the identity of the persons who committed the theft of the pistols with the persons who committed the homicide. The statement in the confessions, and the statement of appellant upon the trial, as to the position of Asa Chinn during the pistol firing in the Chinn house, that is, that he was in a stooping or kneeling position, is corroborated by Chinn. Indeed practically the only statement contained in the confession that is uncorroborated is the one that O'Brien, and not appellant, fired the shot that killed A. B. Chinn. Not only is that statement uncorroborated, but in the evidence introduced by the Commonwealth upon the trial, of the conversation between appellant and O'Brien which occurred shortly before the trial, we find that each accused the other of the murder of Chinn. The jury, however, found from the evidence, as they were authorized to do, that they were accomplices, aiders and abettors, and, therefore, equally guilty, whether the shot was fired by the one or the other; and the evidence conduces to show that both were firing their pistols in the room where the homicide occurred, and that each of them had a pistol in addition to the probably worthless one that appellant carried with him to Lexington.

The jury were doubtless unwilling to accept the statement of appellant that O'Brien, his junior in age, and, according to the evidence, also his junior in crime, was the leader and instigator of the thefts and murder of which both stood convicted.

It is complained that the Commonwealth's attorney in argument to the jury said that "the defendant was forced to admit, upon cross-examination, that on the way from Louisville to Lexington he was trying his pistol to see whether it would work as a preparation for what he intended to do, and what he did do, when he came to Lexington."

After this statement was made and objection entered the court properly excluded the statement and admonished the jury not to consider the remark, whereupon the Commonwealth's attorney then said to the jury that he did not mean to make the statement that appellant was trying his pistol as a preparation for what he intended to do as the assertion of a fact, but as an inference of his own. There was evidence to show that appellant tried to fire his pistol on the road to Lexington, but failed. It is hardly possible that this statement of the attorney could in any way have been prejudicial to the appellant even if the court had permitted it to stand. It certainly could not have been so in view of the admonition of the court.

In Handley v. Commonwealth, 15 Ky. Law Rep., 786, this court held: "While certain statements made by the attorney for the Commonwealth on his argument to the jury were improper, because not warranted by the evidence, the appellant was not prejudiced thereby, the court having admonished the jury that such statement could not be considered as evidence in the case."

A careful examination of the record in this case fails to disclose any errors whereby the substantial rights of the appellant have been prejudiced. The instructions meet our approval, and the verdict of the jury is, in our opinion, sustained by the evidence.

The judgment is, therefore, affirmed.

---

COMBS, &c. v. DAVIDSON.

(Filed May 20, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Conveyances—Fraud and undue influence—Appellee, an infirm old woman of feeble understanding, made a deed of conveyance to two parties, one of whom had married her favorite granddaughter and resided at her house, for an inadequate consideration. In this action she sought to set aside and cancel said conveyance on the ground of fraud and undue influence practiced upon her in its execution. Held—That the evidence sustains the action of the chancellor in cancelling said deed.

W. C. Eversole for appellants.

Wooton & Mergan and Eversole & Wheeler for appellee.

Appeal from Perry Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Barker.

On the 16th day of April, 1892, the appellee, Sallie Davidson, conveyed by deed her home in Hazard, Perry county, Kentucky, to the appellants, Rankin C. and John C. Combs, upon the stipulated consideration of $150, $1 of which was cash, and for the remaining $149 they executed and delivered their promissory note, payable in twelve months thereafter, without interest.

Subsequently the appellee instituted this action in the Perry Circuit Court for the purpose of obtaining a decree setting aside the conveyance to appellants, upon the ground of fraud and collusion on their part, inadequate consideration for the deed, and that appellee, by reason of her age and mental and physical infirmities, was unable to appreciate or understand the contract she had made; that appellants were lawyers and merchants, well versed in matters of business, and the legal effects of contracts and conveyances; that appellee, by reason of her age and infirmities of mind and body, was unable to resist the influence of appellants, who, by exercising undue influence and fraud, had procured her to convey to them her home upon a grossly insufficient consideration. The material allegations of the petition were denied by the answer. The evidence showed that appellee was a widow of seventy-three years of age; that she owned the house and lot in controversy, which she occupied, partly as a residence for herself, and rented part to appellants, who used it both as a store and as a residence; that some time before the conveyance Rankin C. Combs intermarried with the granddaughter of appellee, and that prior to the making of the deed all of the parties occupied the house jointly; that appellee was devoted to her granddaughter, Laura Rankin, and greatly depended upon her love for comfort in her declining days. Appellants also appear to have possessed her confidence and esteem.

There is some contrariety in the evidence as to the condition of appellee's mind at the time of the sale. The witnesses for appellee testify that she was of weak mind and uncertain memory, and not at all in condition to engage in business so important as the sale of her home; that she was easily influenced by those in whom she had confidence, and for whom she had affection. The evidence adduced by appellants tends to show that she was of sound mind, and capable of looking after her own affairs.

We think it may be fairly concluded that, by reason of her age and frail health, appellee's mind had become greatly weakened, and that she yielded to those about her who had her confidence and esteem. As an inducement to her to sell the house and lot to appellants, they represented that if the sale was not made they would purchase another house and remove to it, thus depriving appellee of the society of her granddaughter, upon whom she was dependent; but that if the sale was made, appellee could always have a home with appellants. The evidence shows that the house and lot involved in this litigation was worth from $250 to $300, and that shortly after the purchase of her home it was made so unpleasant to her that she was forced to leave and take up her residence with other relatives.

Upon the trial of the case the chancellor sustained the prayer of the petition, adjudged the conveyance to have been obtained by fraud, and awarded appellee a rescission of the contract. From this judgment the appeal has been prosecuted.

In the case of Huban v. Huban, 3 Ky. Law Rep., 56, this court said: "A conveyance by a person of feeble condition of body and mind to another, under whose influence he was placed, no sufficient consideration appearing, is fraudulent and void." And in the case of Boarman v. Gardner, 7 Ky. Law Rep., 52: "Where a person of weak understanding makes an unconscionable bargain with one of strong mind, the natural inference is that it was obtained by the power of the strong over the weak, and may be set aside."

In the case of Hunter v. Owens, 10 Ky. Law Rep., 651, Judge Bennett delivering the opinion, the court said: "Gross inadequacy of price is always a badge of fraud, and sometimes when the disproportion between the value and the price given is very great, the chancellor may, from that fact alone, infer fraud. We will treat, in this case, of the inadequacy of price as a badge of fraud, and then inquire into the question of actual fraud. The appellee was ignorant and dull, and wholly unacquainted with the value of said land, and relied upon the appellant to sell it to her at a reasonable price, and he had reason to believe that he had her confidence and that she relied upon his judgment as to the value of said land, and not her own; it was, therefore, his duty to deal, as to price, fairly with her. They were not at arm's length, and gross inadequacy of price, always a badge of fraud, becomes an actual fraud when the parties do not deal with each other at arm's length. We are constrained to the conclusion that the chancellor was justified in his inference of actual fraud in this case."

The principle thus announced is not inimical to the opinion in the case of Rabb v. Rabb, 23 Ky. Law Rep., 971, or of Neal v. Neal, 16 Ky. Law Rep.,

2530 OWENSBORO WATERWORKS CO. V. CITY OF O., &C.

195. In these cases there was no evidence of fraud; the respective parties were equal in intelligence, health and education, and the court refused to relieve the complainants from the consequence of acts deliberately and intelligently entered into.

In the case at bar we have an illiterate, childish, infirm old woman, living in the house with two active, alert, strong-willed men, carrying on the business both of practicing law and merchandizing; one of them had married the favorite granddaughter of this old woman. They obtained from her a conveyance of her home for about one-half of its real value, using, as a means to induce her to make the sale, the threat that unless it was made she would be deprived of the society of her granddaughter, to whom she was devotedly attached, and upon whom she was dependent for love and affection, and by the representation that if the sale was made to them, she could remain in the house with her granddaughter, and find a home and shelter with appellants. It required only the lapse of a few weeks to shatter the old woman's hope of finding a comfortable home with her granddaughter, for, by what she considered ill treatment, she was driven out to find a home elsewhere. Under all the circumstances of this case we are constrained to the conclusion that the chancellor did not err in vacating this unequal contract.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

---

OWENSBORO WATERWORKS CO. v. CITY OF OWENSBORO, &c.

(Filed May 20, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Franchise taxes—Municipal government—Injunction—This action was brought to enjoin the city of Owensboro from selling the waterworks plant under a levy for franchise taxes for the years 1893 and 1894. The waterworks company brought an action against the city for water rents which it asked to offset against its claim for taxes. These actions were consolidated and the claim for water rent was allowed, and offset against the claim for taxes and a judgment in favor of the city for taxes was rendered, and the collector was about to sell the plant to satisfy this judgment. It is insisted that the city was not authorized to levy a franchise tax for 1893, as the charter of the city did not take effect until June 15, 1893, and the levy was made under an ordinance passed in April, while the city was under the old charter. Held—That the said objection is not tenable as the tax was authorized by the general revenue law which took effect in 1892, but the city had no right to impose the penalty of 10 per cent. for nonpayment of taxes, as by section 3400, Kentucky Statutes, interest should be allowed on unpaid taxes from the first of October of each year at 8 per cent. The injunction in so far as it sought to restrain the collector from selling the plant should not have been dissolved. Under section 172 of the Constitution the Board of Equalization properly fixed the valuation at its fair cash value, estimated at the price it would bring at a fair voluntary sale. Section 4274, Kentucky Statutes, providing for fixing the assessment at 70 per cent. of its cash value, was superseded by the Constitution.

Sweeney, Ellis & Sweeney for appellant.

Geo. W. Jolly for appellees.

• Appeal from Daviess Circuit Court.

Opinion of the court by Judge Hobson.

On April 11, 1896, appellant, the Owensboro Water Co., filed its petition in equity, enjoining the city of Owensboro from selling its plant under a levy made by the tax collector for a franchise tax for the years 1893 and 1894.

The city filed answer contesting the allegations of the petition. During the progress of the action the water company brought another suit against the city to recover judgment against it for certain hydrant rents due it by the city under a contract between them. As a set-off and counterclaim the city pleaded the franchise taxes due it by the water company. The two actions were consolidated. After this the city having dismissed without prejudice so much of its counterclaims as related to the taxes for the year 1897, filed a separate suit against the water company to recover these taxes and the water company filed an answer controverting its liability for the tax, making in substance the same issues as were already raised in the other two suits. The three suits were then consolidated, and on final hearing the court offset the taxes against the water rent and gave a judgment over in favor of the city.

It is insisted that the city had no authority to levy a franchise tax for the year 1893, as the new charter of the city took effect on June 15, 1893, and the levy was made by an ordinance passed by the city council in April of that year, while the city was under the old charter. The general act regulating revenue and taxation had taken effect, however, in the fall of 1892, and thereby it was provided that corporations like appellant should "annually pay a tax on its franchise to the State and a local tax thereon to the county, incorporated city, town and taxing district where its franchise may be exercised." The act also provided for the assessment of the franchise by the board of valuation and the certifying of the value by the auditor to the county clerk. (Kentucky Statutes, section 4077, 4084.) The city was authorized by its existing charter to make a levy, and this power in connection with the act referred to authorized the collection of the franchise tax for the year 1893. The precise question was before this court in the bank tax cases (102 Ky., 174); and, although it is not referred to in the opinion, it was necessarily involved in the decision of those cases, as the validity of the franchise taxes against the banks for the year 1893 was there sustained.

The court gave judgment against the water company for the amount of the taxes also a penalty of 10 per cent. on the amount of the tax and interest on the amount of the tax at 10 per cent. In this he followed section 4091, Kentucky Statutes: "All taxes assessed against any corporation, company or association under this article, except banks and trust companies, shall be due and payable thirty days after notice of same has been given to said corporation, company or association by the auditor; and every such corporation, company or association failing to pay its taxes, after receiving thirty days' notice, shall be deemed delinquent, and a penalty of 10 per cent. on the amount of the tax shall attach, and thereafter such tax shall bear interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum. Any such corporation, company or association failing to pay its taxes, penalty and interest, after becoming delinquent, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be fined $50 for each day the same remains unpaid, to be recovered by indictment or civil action, of which the Franklin Circuit Court shall have jurisdiction."

2532 OWENSBORO WATERWORKS CO. V. CITY OF O., &O.

By section 4083 it is the duty of the auditor, immediately after the value of the franchise is fixed by the board, to notify the corporation of the fact, and it is then allowed thirty days from the time of receiving the notice to go before the board and ask a change in the valuation. After the expiration of thirty days, by section 4084, it is the duty of the auditor to certify to the county clerks the amount liable for county, city, town or district tax. The notice by the auditor to the corporation referred to in section 4091 can not be the notice named in section 4083, for after that notice is given the corporation is allowed thirty days to go before the board for a rehearing. The notice referred to in section 4091 seems to be a notice by the auditor to the corporation of the amount of its tax, which is payable to the State treasury with a view to its payment; for the corporation is made delinquent if it fails to pay after receiving thirty days' notice, and the Franklin Circuit Court is given jurisdiction. The auditor has nothing to do with the collection of county or city taxes and the Franklin Circuit Court is the fiscal court of the State. The same legislature which passed this act also passed the act for the government of the cities of the third class, and by section 3400, which is part of the act for the government of these cities, "all taxes shall bear interest at the rate of 8 per centum per annum from the first of October of each year." The rule is that the acts of the same legislature are to be read together, and under this rule section 4091 must be held not to apply to cities of the third class. We, therefore, conclude that interest should be allowed on the taxes from the first of October of each year at 8 per cent., and that no penalty beyond this should be charged.

For one year the city valued the tangible property of the corporation at $15,000 more than it was assessed at by the State Board. As the water company has paid taxes on this $15,000 in its tangible property, the amount should be deducted from the franchise tax for that year, as otherwise it would pay to this extent twice on the same property. The city tax collector had no authority to levy on and sell the property of the water company. This was held in Louisville Water Co. v. Hamilton, 81 Ky., 517. But the water company having come into court for relief, and the city being authorized to proceed by action to collect its tax, the court properly settled the accounts between the parties while they were before them, but so much of the injunction as restrained the tax collector from selling the plant of the water company should not have been discharged. (Elizabethtown & Paducah R. R. Co. v. Trustees of Elizabethtown, 75 Ky., 234.)

By section 4274, Kentucky Statutes, the board of equalization fixes the assessment of real property at 70 per cent. of its cash value, but this is a provision of the act of May 4, 1888, and has been superseded by section 172 of the Constitution, by which all property not exempted from taxation must be assessed at its fair cash value, estimated at the price it would bring at a fair voluntary sale, and it is the duty of the board and all other officials now to comply with the provision of the Constitution. The act of 1888, in so far as it is in conflict with the provision of the Constitution, is no longer in force. Appellant can not, therefore, complain of the assessment of its property by the board of valuation at its fair cash value.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for a judgment as herein indicated.

LEWIS v. MILLER, JUDGE.

(Filed May 20, 1903.)

Writ of prohibition—Exemption from process—Appellant was sued for a debt owing by her father and sought to be made liable to the extent of assets received from him. She makes this application for a writ prohibiting the chancellor from proceeding with said suit, claiming that she was exempt from the service of process by reason of being a nonresident, who came into this State as a witness in litigation in which she was interested. Held—That as she came into the State without having been brought here by plaintiff, she is not exempt from the service of process. As her father, by absenting himself from the State, could not avoid process on his liabilities in case he had returned to the State, appellant, to the extent that she received assets from him, could occupy no better position than her father.

W. Pratt Dale for plaintiff.

Harris Marshall for defendant.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Chief Justice Burnam.

The plaintiff, Katherine D. Lewis, had applied to this court for a writ of prohibition against the Hon. Shackelford Miller, judge of the first division of the chancery branch of the Jefferson Circuit Court, to prevent him from proceeding with the trial of an action instituted against her in the Jefferson Circuit Court by the Citizens National Bank of Louisville. She alleges in substance that in January, 1875, the Citizens National Bank recovered a judgment against her father, Blanton Duncan, deceased, for $1,750, with interest, upon which execution issued, and was returned no property found; that on the 16th day of March, 1903, the bank instituted a suit against her on the debt, alleging that she had received more than the amount of their judgment from the estate of her father as heir at law; and that summons was served upon her on this suit while she was temporarily in Kentucky for the purpose of testifying as a witness in an appeal which she had taken from the judgment of the Jefferson County Court probating the will of her father; that she entered her special appearance in the action filed against her and moved the court to quash the summons which was served upon her on the ground that she could not be legally sued under the circumstances; that Judge Miller overruled her motion to quash the summons, and will, unless prohibited by this court, proceed to hear and determine the action.

In support of this motion we have been referred to numerous decisions of courts of last resort in other States, holding, in substance, a suitor, or witness, to be exempt from the service of process while without the jurisdiction of his residence for the purpose of attending court in an action to which he is a party, or in which he is to be sworn as a witness. But this exact question seems not to have been adjudicated by the court of this State. But in Catlett v. Morton, 14 Ky., 122, a member of the legislature, while attending its deliberations, was sued for debt in the Franklin Circuit Court, and he plead his privilege as a member under the constitutional provision, which provides: "No person or persons shall, under any pretense, directly or indirectly, or by any ways or means whatever, arrest, assail, menace, or otherwise disturb the person of a member during his privilege except on legal process for treason, felony or breach of the peace."

But it was held by this court, in an opinion by Judge Mills, that the only effect of this provision was to protect members from arrest, and that they were subject to the execution of any other process as other citizens. The rule laid down in this case was subsequently followed in Jonson v. Offutt, 64 Ky., 19. Privilege from arrest seems to have been the limit allowed suitors and witnesses at common law whilst going to, attending and returning from court on business connected with their suits. (A. & E. Ency. of Law, volume 16, page 40, and cases cited there; Greenleaf on Evidence, 15th edition, section 316, 317 and 318.) An interesting history of the origin and reason of this rule at common law is given by Judge Reeve in King v. Coit, 4 Day, 129. He says: "When a member of parliament was arrested the ancient practice was to obtain a writ of privilege, not from the suit, but for the arrest, and a supersedeas issued to the court to stay the proceedings as long as the privilege of parliament lasted. A more summary mode was afterwards had of obtaining a discharge by motion, but it was not from suit, but from arrest, and was so expressly laid down in the case of Ritt Comyn, 44 Fortes, 342, Cast Hardwick, 28."

The only statutory provisions which we have in force which bear upon the question is section 81 of the Civil Code, which provides: "In an action brought pursuant to section 78, a defendant who is summoned out of the county in which it is brought, and who had not resided therein when the action was begun, can not be summoned in that or any other action of the plaintiff while visiting such county for the sole purpose of defending the first-named action."

And section 542 of the Code provides: "A witness shall not be liable to be sued in a county in which he does not reside, by being served with a summons in such county while going, returning or attending in obedience to a summons."

It is evident that plaintiff can not support her contention under either of these provisions of the Code, as it is not contended that the Citizens National Bank had anything to do with bringing her to this State or that she came in obedience to any summons served upon her. After creating the debt sued for, plaintiff's ancestor voluntarily went beyond the jurisdiction of the courts of this State without making provisions for the payment of his obligations. And it would be a great stretch of interstate comity to hold that Duncan would have been exempt from suit at the hands of his creditor if he had voluntarily returned to this State for the purpose of testifying as a witness or attending to litigation in which he was interested. Plaintiff to the extent that she has received assets from his estate as his heir at law, occupies no better attitude. And it seems to us, both under the common law, the decisions of this court, and the statute law, in so far as they have any bearing upon the question, that plaintiff is not privileged from suit at the hands of the citizens of this State while voluntarily attending a trial in which she is interested as a witness.

The motion for a writ of prohibition is, therefore, overruled.

HOLTHEIDE v. SMITH, JR., &c.<sup>1</sup>

(Filed May 21, 1903—Not to be reported.)

Cancelling conveyance—Evidence—Appellant brought this suit against the husband and son of his sister, alleging that several years prior to her death he conveyed to his sister real property for the recited consideration of $1,500, when in fact no money was paid, but the property was conveyed to her to hold for him so as to protect it from any claim of his wife, who was separated from him. The court properly excluded the deposition of appellant, as it was against his sister, who was deceased, and it properly refused to set aside the conveyance on parol testimony that purported to impeach the consideration, as there is no allegation of fraud or mistake. The law is well settled that parol evidence will not be received to impeach the consideration of a deed which has been solemnly made by a party without an allegation of fraud or mistake.

Morris B. Gifford and Wilson & Gifford for appellant.

John Roberts and William Furlong for appellees.

Appeal from Jefferson Circuit Court, Chancery division.

Opinion of the court by Judge Nunn.

The appellant, F. J. Holtheide, stated in his petition that prior to the month of August, 1890, that he and his wife, Blanche, had become estranged and separated, and that they agreed that if he would join her in a deed conveying her property in Chicago that she would join him in a conveyance of his property in Louisville, the purpose being to relieve the property of each of any interest of the other; that the agreement was perfected by the execution of the deeds; that he, in connection with his wife, on the 28th day of August, 1890, conveyed lots Nos. 1204 and 1206, on Kentucky street, in Louisville, Ky., to his sister, Lula M. Holtheide, for the recited consideration of $1,500, when in fact no consideration whatever was paid; that his sister took the title and agreed to hold the property for him, with the promise to reconvey it to him on demand, or to make a conveyance thereof to any person whom he might designate; that his sister subsequently married R. T. Smith, and died on February 27, 1899, leaving one child, the appellee, Frederick R. Smith; that he had not made any request of her in her lifetime for a conveyance to himself or anyone. He instituted this action on the 28th day of October, 1901, against the husband of Lula and her child, asking that his deed of August 27, 1890, be cancelled and adjudged void, and that his title be quieted, and that he recover of appellee, R. T. Smith, as administrator of Lula M. Holtheide, the rent received for said property. The answer presented a traverse of the petition.

The appellant took his own deposition and that of his mother, sister and George Shea. His own deposition was objected to, and the court properly sustained the objection because he was testifying against an infant and with reference to transactions had with a person who was then dead. The substance of the evidence of the other three witnesses was that they had heard Lula M. Holtheide, the vendee in the deed, say frequently that she was holding that property for her brother Frank to keep his wife, Blanche, from getting it. No witness stated that she said at any time that she did not pay the consideration named in the deed. Even if there were no legal obstacle in the way, the evidence in this case is hardly sufficient to authorize the setting aside of a deed made eleven years before the action was instituted against the heirs of the vendee.

It is insisted on behalf of appellant that it is competent to show the true consideration of the deed by parol evidence, but it is well settled in Kentucky that parol testimony is not admissible, in the absence of an allegation of fraud or mistake, to show that a deed absolute on its face, as in this case, was really conveyed in trust for the grantor. In Crutch v. Muir's Ex'or, 90 Ky., 142, which was a suit by the grantor against the heirs of the grantee to enforce the alleged verbal contract of redemption, the court in that case said: "There is a marked distinction between a legal title to real estate acquired under circumstances that make a trust upon the holder in favor of a person other than the immediate grantor, and that conveyed by an absolute deed from the vendor to the purchaser. An action for equitable relief may be brought and maintained in the first-mentioned case without either charging a person upon a contract for the sale of real estate or contradicting or varying the terms of a deed under which the legal title is held, though the result may be to change a conveyance, absolute on its face, into a mortgage or deed of trust, or to vest the holder of the title altogether. Consequently an agreement upon which claim for relief is in such case founded may, though not in writing, exist and be enforced without violation of the statutes referred to, and be established by parol, notwithstanding the general rule of evidence mentioned."

In the case of Munford v. Green's Adm'r, 103 Ky., 140, the court said: "It is not alleged that there was any fraud or mistake in the execution of the deed, or any vice therein. There is no claim that any language was used in the deed which was not intended by the parties to be used in expressing the contract between the parties. The sole question in this case is whether parol testimony, in the absence of any allegation of fraud or mistake, is admissible to contradict the legal import of a deed. We are of the opinion that this can not be done. It is a well-settled rule in this State that parol evidence is not admissible to contradict written evidence, except in cases of fraud or mistake, or where there is vice in the contract. The question in the case of Thomas v. McCormick, 9 Dana, 109, involved the identical question to be determined in this case. In that case the court adjudged that parol testimony was inadmissible to show that a deed, in terms an absolute conveyance, was not intended as such, but was designed as a mortgage. In speaking of the rule, the court said: 'Though it may operate harshly in a particular case, is, nevertheless, so salutary and conservative that an inflexible adherence to it is necessary for effectuating the policy of the statute of frauds and perjuries, and of giving proper security to property, and full effect to solemn contracts in writing.' * * * It was held in Faris, &c. v. Dunn, 7 Bush, 278, that a resulting trust may be established by parol testimony. In that case a father bought a tract of land with the money of his daughter, and took the conveyance of the legal title to himself. The court held that a trust resulted. It is plain that the parol testimony did not contradict any writing which the daughter had signed. In the case of Cary v. Callan's Ex'or, 6 B. M., 44, the proceeding was to establish a resulting trust upon the ground that Callan had expended in the acquisition of some property an amount of money derived from the estate of the common father of himself and sisters. The sisters were not parties to the deed, and the court recognized that the resulting trust, if it existed, could be established by parol testimony. This testimony did not involve the contradiction of an instrument of writing. Those who sought to establish the trust had not executed the instrument of writing." To the same effect are the cases 4 J. J. M., 591, and 14 Ky. Law Rep., 655.

In the case before us the party seeking to establish the trust in his favor signed the conveyance, and there is no allegation in his petition or any proof to show that there was either fraud or mistake in the execution of it.

Wherefore, the judgment is affirmed.

Ex. J. H.
1/2/04

INDEX TO VOLUME 24--PART II.

ACTIONS —See Bonds, 1, 2.	Page-
AGENTS —See Common Carrier, 3, 15; Corporations, 7; Fiscal Courts, 1, 2; Insurance, 7, 29; Landlord and Tenant, 6, 7; Malicious Prosecution, 1—
1. authority of agent to do particular act required .....	1418
2. authority of agent properly considered in evidence.....	2461
3. such evidence no surprise to defendant.....	2461
APPEALS —See Burden of Proof, 1; Clerical Misprision, 1; Common Carrier, 16; Divorce, 3, 5, 6; Judgment, 7; Judicial Sales, 12; New Trial, 8; Parent and Child, 2; Sheriff, 7; Taxation, 5—
1. appeal from judgment involving $195 for timber cut may be prosecuted to Court of Appeals where title to land in issue ...	1222
2. appeal to enjoin officers from performing duties properly dismissed after terms of office of all parties have expired .....	1270
3. the Court of Appeals is less inclined to reverse lower court for granting new trial than for refusing one .....	1286
4. lower court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial... 1286
5. Court of Appeals will not reverse a conviction for want of evidence if there is any evidence to sustain the conviction .....	1301
6. issue raised on former appeal and considered by the court is res judicata on second appeal .....	1317
7. a civil action can not be docketed and advanced except by consent. 1340
8. a civil action does not stand for trial unless transcript filed twenty days before the term .....	1340
9. liability of life estate of husband for taxes, also to revivor against heirs of wife settled on former appeal.....	1358
10. order made dismissing petition where mandate ordering same filed without giving ten days' notice was a clerical misprision. ....	1385
11. no appeal lies from a clerical misprision until after motion to correct in lower court .....	1385
12. confirmation of report of commissioner disallowing a claim is not a final order from which an appeal can be prosecuted. ....	1480
13. in action of trespass to recover $100 damages, where title to land involved, Court of Appeals has jurisdiction of appeal. ....	1571
14. motion to dismiss appeal for want of revivor is equivalent to motion to strike action from the docket .....	1573
15. such motion should be sustained where appellant had been dead more than a year.....	1573
16. objection that whole amount involved on appeal is interest not valid when appeal involves the right to collect interest .....	1633
17. circuit judge compelled by mandamus to grant Commonwealth an appeal .....	1663
18. Court of Appeals will not consider question as to apportionment of funds allowed as extra compensation to two personal representatives before same is presented in lower court .....	1783
19. failure to file bill of exceptions until first day of succeeding term—bill stricken from the record .....	1936
20. time prescribed by the Code for filing bills of exceptions can not be extended by rule of practice .....	1936
21. appeals from separate claims of less than $200 not considered by Court of Appeals .....	2037
22. appeal will be dismissed where schedule for partial transcript not filed in lower court within ninety days after granting appeal....	2056
23. subsequent filing of partial record will not cure the defect. ....	2056
24. an appeal bond is valid although signed by the surety alone.....	2012
25. appeal by Commonwealth in criminal case can be prosecuted only when transcript filed within sixty days after appeal granted ...	2155
26. no cross appeal allowed where no motion for new trial made in lower court .....	2315

- APEALS—Continued. Page.
27. judgment affirmed where record shows that depositions were read on trial which are not in the bill of exceptions.....2315
  28. an order directing money to be paid into court without any order distributing same is not a final order from which an appeal lies.2374
  29. a bill of exceptions signed at a subsequent term after the trial not considered on appeal where no order appears extending time for filing same.....2381
  30. misconduct of attorney in argument not excepted to will not be considered on appeal.....2393
- ARBITRATION—See Insurance, 22, 23.
- ASSIGNMENT FOR BENEFIT OF CREDITORS—See Attorneys, 18; Fraud, 4, 5—
1. one of two assignees for benefit of creditors is bound by fraudulent acts of his associate. . . . .1292
  2. an assignment for benefit of creditors includes a contingent remainder interest in land belonging to the assignor . . . . .1807
  3. the title to the real and personal estate of an assignor for the benefit of creditors vests in his assignee until all debts are paid . . .1493
  4. after settlement of trust and order entered discharging assignee, title to books and accounts do not pass to personal representative of deceased assignor if any debts remain unpaid . . . . .1498
  5. the order discharging the assignee only created a vacancy in that office . . . . .1498
  6. the chancellor can appoint another trustee . . . . .1498
  7. courts of equity will not permit a trust to fail for want of a trustee.1498
  8. order discharging assignee void unless made as directed by statute.1785
  9. creditors of assignor in this State must be made equal with foreign creditors who hold collaterals for their debts . . . . .2185
  10. allowance to administrator of former assignee for services was proper . . . . .2185
  11. where assigned estate is represented by an attorney, another attorney representing claims against it not entitled to a fee payable out of the estate . . . . .2185
  12. proper allowance to attorney for estate . . . . .2186
  13. allowance of $1,500 to commissioner for selling 330 tracts of land approved . . . . .2186
- ATTACHMENT—See Bankruptcy; Evidence, 29—
1. an attachment sued out by plaintiff in a suit for damages for malicious cutting, on the ground that defendant was about to sell and dispose of his property, creates a lien prior to a mortgage subsequently executed on same . . . . .1860
  2. sufficiency of grounds for attachment of property of principal and surety for indemnity for fraudulent removal of goods . . . . .1949
  3. incompetent evidence to sustain attachment . . . . .2048
- ATTORNEYS—See Assignment for Benefit of Creditors, 11, 12; County Attorney, 2; Criminal Law, 11, 83; Divorce, 5; Personal Representatives, 9, 18, 19—
1. the chancery division of the Jefferson Circuit Court has jurisdiction to try proceedings to revoke the license of an attorney.....1218
  2. any circuit court may hear and determine charges against attorneys practicing before it. . . . .1218
  3. although contract for attorneys' fees may be champertous, a reasonable fee for services may be recovered . . . . .1321
  4. misconduct of Commonwealth's attorney in argument, where his statements not made part of record or excepted to, not considered on appeal.....1427
  5. city attorney who defeats injunction to restrain collection of taxes from banks only entitled to collect his commissions on damages adjudged....1529
  6. he is not entitled to his commission on the amount finally collected during the administration of his successor in office . . .1529
  7. he is not entitled to compensation for services or expenses volunteered in prosecuting action in Supreme Court of United States..1529
  8. argument of attorney for the Commonwealth not prejudicial to the defendant . . . . .1743
  9. contract for fees as attorney to collect claim against the government during time he holds the office of minister to Hawaii void because in violation of Federal statutes.....1773
  10. contract is prohibited though the statute only inflicts a penalty..1773

ATTORNEYS—Continued.

Page.

11. a penalty implies a prohibition ..... 1772
12. liability of personal representative for services of attorney accepted in lower court..... 1912
13. fee of attorney employed by assignor for benefit of creditors properly allowed out of assets where their services resulted in increasing the assets ..... 2029
14. attorney representing contestant for office of representative has no authority to receive appropriation made for benefit of his client.. 2200
15. the State may recover said amount from the attorney..... 2200

BANKRUPTCY—

- levy of attachment from State court on a horse released by discharge in bankruptcy ..... 2144

BANKS—

1. on issue as to whether bank stock was purchased it was error to give peremptory instruction for plaintiff ..... 2080
2. verbal contract of subscription for bank stock is valid ..... 2088
3. ratification of unauthorized subscription for bank stock is binding on the bank. .... 2038
4. on issue as to subscription for stock peremptory instruction for the bank was proper ..... 2088, 2088
5. on issue as to subscription for bank stock, burden of proof is on the bank ..... 2088

BILLS AND NOTES—See Burden of Proof, 2, 4; Decedent's Estates, 1, 2; Fraud, 1, 2; Pleading, 18; Title, 7, 8, 9; Usury, 2, 3, 4—

1. sufficiency of noting protest on bills and notes and writing out instrument of protest. .... 1854
2. bill payable "one hundred and eighty days" construed to be payable "one hundred and eighty days after date" ..... 1854
3. after assignment made for benefit of creditors notice of protest sent to assignor who was maker of the note sufficient..... 1854
4. execution by son-in-law of note to decedent. to be void at death of decedent, not valid as a gift to daughter of decedent because same was not delivered to her..... 1474
5. defense by indorser that the maker of a note would execute a mortgage and obtain another indorser is valid .... 1764
6. fraud as a defense to action on note not proven. .... 2156
7. where no defense to original note existed a purchaser not affected by defective execution of renewals ..... 2156
8. a discount of note by bank cuts off defenses which can not revive after same is taken up by indorser after failure of maker to pay same ..... 2156
9. party bound on note executed for general accommodation of co-maker although it may be discounted at a different bank from the one named in the note..... 2156
10. where surety signs blank note he is liable for the amount which the principal afterwards writes in the blank... .... 2255
11. a surety by signing and delivering blank note to principal constitutes him his agent to fill up same ..... 2255
12. trustees of school district not personally liable on notes executed by them for money used in building schoolhouse... .... 2268
13. person collecting money under forged endorsement of check liable to owner of check for conversion of his property ..... 2314
14. holder of note executed on representations that same was for purchase of a given number of ties, entitled to recover only the reasonable value of ties delivered..... 2319
15. evidence does not show that note was executed as advancement on ties... .... 2319
16. verdict for amount of note flagrantly against the evidence..... 2319
17. mortgage only secures a debt and no personal judgment should be rendered on it. .... 2377

BONDS—

1. judgment for forfeiture of bond to keep the peace can not be had on motion and notice..... 1810
2. recovery for breach of a peace bond can be had only by civil action . 1810

BOUNDARY—

1. where a boundary line is in dispute an agreement locating same is founded on a sufficient consideration and the line located accepted by party by placing fence on same ..... 2444
2. purchasers of adjoining lots at same sale are bound by description of lots sold..... 1685

BOUNDARY—Continued.

Page.

3. where fence not on true division line one lot owner can not maintain action for damages against other for changing the line ... 1285
4. the purchase of one lot owner not champertous. .... 1285
5. one party not liable for damages unless he has gotten over the line ... 1285
6. the question involved is the true location of the boundary line ... 1285
7. parcel agreement establishing boundary between parties is binding ... 1285
8. no joint use of wall granted in particular case ... 1285
9. under particular will description of land sufficiently definite to include land claimed by the daughter of testator ... 1285

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS—See Taxation, 7—

1. a stockholder not entitled to credit for stock payment as to withdrawal value of stock where his claim remains with the company unsettled at the time the company becomes insolvent ... 1286
2. on claim against association to recover usury cost of expenses and losses not proven ... 1286
3. borrowing member not chargeable with uncollected usury as losses ... 1286
4. how stock in insolvent building and loan association created by borrowing stockholders ... 1286
5. particular method of settlement disapproved ... 1286

BURDEN OF PROOF—See Municipal Taxation, 3—

1. a party having taken no exception to the ruling of the court in fixing the burden of proof can not complain on appeal ... 1286
2. burden of proving consideration for note is on defendant ... 1286
3. sufficient consideration for note proven in particular case ... 1286
4. where surety pleads novation as a defense to action on a note he assumes the burden of proof ... 1286
5. in action to enforce contract for sale of land burden of proof is on defendant to show that contract was conditional ... 1286

CHAMPERTY—See Attorneys, 2; Boundary, 5—

1. a warranty contained in a champertous deed is void ... 1286
2. where a vendee under a champertous deed makes a sale of land and afterwards acquires a valid title, his vendee is entitled to this after-acquired title. .... 1286
3. he could only recover on a valid warranty ... 1286

CLERICAL MISPRISION—See Appeals, 10, 11; Decedents' Estates, 8—

1. premature trial of action is a clerical misprision and can not be questioned on appeal until after motion made to correct it in lower court ... 1286
2. trial in particular case not premature. .... 1286

CODE OF PRACTICE, CIVIL—

1. section 25, authorizing action by person having a common interest for benefit of all, construed ... 1286
2. section 28, relative to appointment of guardian ad litem, construed ... 1286
3. section 59, relating to commencement of actions, construed ... 1286
4. section 72, relating to jurisdiction of actions, construed ... 1286
5. section 82, authorizing joinder of actions, construed ... 1286
6. section 97, relating to cross-petitions, construed ... 1286
7. sections 114 and 115, relating to setting up claims by pleading, construed ... 1286
8. section 124, authorizing change of name of accused in an indictment, construed ... 1286
9. section 124, subsection 2, relating to certainty of charge in indictment, construed ... 1286
10. sections 214 and 221, providing for execution of bonds to release attachments, distinguished ... 1286
11. section 237, providing for attachment as indemnity, construed ... 1286
12. section 237, relating to selection of jurors, construed ... 1286
13. sections 334 and 337, relating to appeals and bills of exceptions, construed ... 1286
14. section 344, relating to limitation of time within which petition for new trial may be filed, construed ... 1286
15. section 371, relating to dismissal of actions without prejudice, construed ... 1286
16. section 381, prescribing method by which infant may open judgment against him, construed ... 1286
17. section 414, authorizing nonresident defendant to retry action, construed ... 1286
18. section 439, providing for subjection of equitable interests in property to satisfaction of judgments, construed. .... 1286

CODE OF PRACTICE, CIVIL—Continued.

Page.

19. section 444, relating to judgments on motion, construed.....1810
20. section 498, relating to bond for infant's real estate, construed ....1889
21. section 499, providing for proceedings for partition of lands, construed.....1489
22. sections 509 and 510, relating to revivor of actions, construed.....1578
23. section 517, relating to clerical misprision, construed .....1885
24. section 518, relating to petition for new trial, construed .....1886
25. section 542, relating to exemption from service of process while attending court as a witness, construed ... ..2471
26. section 606, subsection 2, relating to competency of interested persons to testify as to statements of decedent, construed .. ...1800, 1867
27. section 671, relating to notice of filing mandate, construed .....1885
28. section 692, relating to distribution of money realized from judicial sales, construed ... ..1882
29. sections 738, 753 and 754, fixing time when appeals stand for trial, construed .....1840
30. section 760, authorizing filing petition for rehearing, construed ...1850
31. section 763, relating to clerical misprision, construed.....1857

CODE OF PRACTICE, CRIMINAL—

1. chapter 2, relating to peace bonds, construed .....1810
2. section 124, regulating venue of offenses, construed ... ..1419
3. section 239, relating to reasonable doubt as to offenses proven, construed.....1921
4. section 281, relative to grounds for new trial, construed..... 2511, 2205
5. section 348, regulating granting of appeals, construed .....1668

COMMISSIONERS—See Assignment for Benefit of Creditors, 13.

COMMON CARRIER—See Contracts, 33; Evidence, 8; Railroads, 14—

1. carrier can not limit its responsibility for negligence by fixing the extent of recovery ... ..1874
2. liability of railroad as common carrier for damages resulting from delay in shipment of live stock.... ..1609
3. statements and representations made by agent of company as an inducement to ship stock admissible in action for damages from delay .....1609
4. statute of United States fixing limit of twenty-eight hours for continuous travel in transportation of live stock competent evidence on question of negligence .....1609
5. liability of common carrier for loss of corn from sinking of barge.1697
6. sufficiency of petition charging negligence.....1697
7. defects in petition cured by answer .....1697
8. damages recovered not excessive.....1697
9. errors in admission of testimony as to repairs of barge after it sunk not prejudicial.....1697
10. liability of common carrier for damages to dental instruments carried in trunks as baggage.....1766
11. common carrier not liable for such damage unless they knew the contents of trunks and agreed to carry same as baggage.....1766
12. knowledge and consent of carrier may be proven by circumstances.1766
13. a drummer has such an interest in baggage as authorizes him to sue for damages to same .....1767
14. under particular contract for shipment of turkeys to Chicago railroad company not liable beyond the delivery of car to the connecting line. ....1846
15. a railroad company in this State is not an agent of its connecting line in another State for purpose of service of process ... ..1846
16. connecting road by appealing has entered its appearance to the action .....1846
17. a common carrier is liable under its contract for injuries sustained to stock beyond its own line by reason of unsafe car furnished...2052
18. records of other roads showing condition of stock incompetent evidence.....2052

COMPROMISE—See County Attorney, 2; Railroads, 10, 11, 12.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—See Liens, 1; Municipal Governments, 37—

1. section 2, Bill of Rights, prohibiting the exercise of absolute and arbitrary power, construed .....1789
2. section 3, prohibiting grant of separate exclusive privileges or emoluments except in consideration of public services, construed.1898
3. section 11, providing that accused is entitled to a speedy trial, construed .....1485

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—Continued.

Page

4. section 28, prohibiting the legislature from creating an office for a longer time than a term of years, construed.....1898
5. section 51, relating to title of acts, construed .....1726, 2352
6. section 59, prohibiting passage of local or special laws, construed..1747
7. section 60, relating to passage of special laws, construed.....1574
8. section 99, relating to terms of office, construed ... 2498
9. section 156, relating to laws affecting classes of cities, construed..1575
10. section 161, prohibiting change of compensation of officer during his term, construed..... 1478
11. section 163, relating to construction of telephone lines through the streets of a city, construed . .... 2358
12. section 211, providing for corporations of other States becoming corporations of this State, construed ..... 1125
13. section 215, imposing penalty for discrimination in charge of freight rates by railroad companies, construed ..... 1887
14. section 218, relating to excessive charges of railroad companies for carrying freight, construed..... 1594, 1779
15. section 231, construed..... 1747
16. section 242, relating to compensation for private property taken or injured for public use, construed... ..1260, 1495
17. interest on taxes in cities of the first class not unconstitutional...1358
18. act of 1884, incorporating the Louisville Merchants' Private Police and Detective Agency, is unconstitutional .....1897
19. an ordinance imposing a license fee on a street contractor is unconstitutional.....2228

CONTEMPT—See Personal Representatives, 21, 22.*CONTINUANCE—See Evidence, 34; Pleading, 11—

1. refusal of court to grant continuance on account of absent witnesses not prejudicial in particular case ..... 1170, 1174
2. refusal to grant continuance on account of absence of counsel not prejudicial . .... 1174
3. not erroneous to refuse continuance on account of absence of witnesses in particular case ... ..1409
4. continuance on account of absence of counsel properly refused...1409
5. the rule is that cases should not ordinarily be continued on account of absence of counsel. .... 1409
6. not error to refuse continuance where affidavit defective and testimony of absent witnesses incompetent. .... 1440
7. defendant in criminal case not prejudiced by refusal to grant him a continuance where statements of absent witnesses are read as evidence..... 1621
8. court did not abuse a sound discretion in refusing to require the statements to be read as true... .. 1621
9. not error to refuse continuance in particular case on account of tired condition of defendant's counsel or on account of absence of witnesses.... 1703
10. absence of party at bedside of dying mother sufficient ground for a continuance. .... 2095
11. error not cured by reading statements of party as evidence ... 2095
12. absence of counsel no ground for continuance where party is represented by other attorneys ... .. 2398

CONTRACTS—See Attorneys, 9, 10, 11; Banks, 2, 3; Common Carrier, 5, 14; Corporations, 8, 4; Damages, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 17, 18, 19, 22, 23, 24, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38; Evidence, 10; Fiscal Courts, 1, 2, 3; Frauds, Statute of, 4, 5, 6, 8; Husband and Wife, 4, 5; Municipal Government, 88; Notaries, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5; Pleading, 34; Railroads, 74, 75; Street Improvements, 4, 26, 27—

1. a contract to pay money to obtain immunity from the law officers for operating a lottery is illegal and contrary to public policy ... 1117
2. this court will not lend its aid to compel the return of money paid under such contract ..... 1117
3. improper instructions in suit for commissions for making lease for farm to gas and oil company with agent of company .... 1418
4. measure of damages for breach of contract to keep ditch open is not the value of crop injured by flooding land ... ..1554
5. measure of damage in such case is cost of opening the ditch... .. 1554
6. degree of care required of land owner to prevent damage from overflow.....1554

CONTRACTS—Continued.	Page.
7. continuation of use of land by maintaining ditch through it for over fifteen years before making contract no bar to recovery of damages .....	1554
8. master liable for services of surgeon rendered his servant where he authorized the employment or ratified same.....	1590
9. donation of ground for sidewalk along public square by county sufficient consideration for permission to maintain hitchrack ....	1651
10. suppression of hitchrack as a nuisance after seventeen years by city authority no cause of action arises for failure of consideration .....	1651
11. county accepted privilege of hitchrack with knowledge that it might become a nuisance.....	1651
12. city not liable for value of land donated to city in such case.....	1651
13. no injunction lies against railroad company for failure to furnish water to citizens where it was released from such duty under its contract by the town company.....	1710
14. the president of the town company had authority to execute such release.....	1711
15. connection of water pipes of citizens with mains of railroad company for fifteen years by permission did not create an easement..	1711
16. railroad company may revoke such license at any time....	1711
17. contract donating land for railroad not set aside for fraud or misrepresentation .....	1761
18. party donating land not permitted to withdraw donation after party accepting has expended money and labor on it.....	1761
19. consideration of a contract may be a prejudice or disadvantage to the promisee.....	1762
20. contract for purchase of land not enforced where contract requires vendee to ascertain number of acres by survey when surveyors prevented from making survey by armed men ...	1793
21. rescission of contract should be ordered in such case.....	1793
22. sufficient description of timber sold in particular contract.....	1828
23. parties can not by contract preclude themselves from resorting to the courts for relief.....	1850
24. county judge not personally liable for failure to comply with his agreement to retain out of a claim due a contractor an amount for his creditor.....	1877
25. such agreement was gratuitous and without consideration. ....	1877
26. particular contract for lease of lands for purposes of operating gas and oil wells not cancelled for failure to comply with conditions.	2169
27. party enjoined from interfering with such privileges ...	2169
28. sufficient petition in action for breach of marriage contract .....	2183
29. measure of damages recoverable in such case .....	2183
30. improper evidence in such case .....	2183
31. under particular purchase of land at judicial sale purchaser did not obtain an interest in a railroad switch .....	2274
32. said switch becomes a part of railroad system ..	2275
33. said company is bound to transport machinery and stone between purchaser's quarry and line of railroad as common carrier .....	2274
34. on division of land between purchasers right to transport stone and machinery over land of one party by another is implied .....	2274
35. contract for purchase of corn shredder not enforced on account of defective condition of machine.....	2306
36. contract for sale of land not void for fraud or misrepresentation as to title .....	2321
37. vendor holds fee-simple title and contract for sale enforceable ..	2322
38. contract for sale of lumber not enforced in particular case.....	2430
39. agent had no authority to waive right of inspection.....	2430
40. compromise of difference on contract based on sufficient consideration bars claim for damages arising under contract.....	2432
41. in action for breach of contract verdict in favor of defendant approved.....	2461
42. no new contract made in particular case.....	2461
43. contract of marriage in consideration of illicit intercourse is void.	2467
44. loss of power of procreation by a woman after contract of marriage sufficient ground for refusal to enforce such contract .....	2467

CONVEYANCES—See Corporations, 14; Fraud, 14; Husband and Wife, 16, 17—

- |   | Page. |
|---|-------|
| 1. a prior clause in a deed giving an estate in fee simple to grantee not affected by subsequent clause giving a remainder to the heirs of the grantor..... | 1264  |
| 2. deed from mother to son cancelled for failure of consideration.....  | 1873  |
| 3. amended pleading showing that recited consideration of $500 was really for the support of the grantor during her life properly allowed.....             | 1873  |
| 4. in particular case both considerations had failed.....   | 1874  |
| 5. grantee entitled to return of $20 paid.....   | 1874  |
| 6. but grantee not entitled to compensation for cost of building small house as rents of land offset same.....  | 1874  |
| 7. deed made by old man to his nephew not set aside on allegation of fraud or undue influence.....  | 1951  |
| 8. renunciation of deed made by an infant to his father.....  | 2198  |
| 9. conveyance from father to son cancelled on equitable terms.....  | 2270  |
| 10. conveyance from brother to sister reciting a valuable consideration paid, not set aside for alleged want of consideration.....                          | 2535  |
| 11. parol evidence to impeach consideration in conveyance incompetent without allegation of fraud or mistake.....   | 2535  |

CORPORATIONS—See Contracts, 13, 14; Mortgages, 1, 2, 4; Notaries, 4, 5; Telephones, 3, 4—

- |  |      |
|--|------|
| 1. a corporation of another State by filing its articles of incorporation with the secretary of state in compliance with the statute becomes a new corporation in this State.....  | 1125 |
| 2. suits against same can not be removed to the Federal courts.....  | 1125 |
| 3. agreement of secretary and treasurer of corporation to take insurance policy and apply its cash surrender value on unpaid subscription of stock of a member is binding on the corporation.....  | 1755 |
| 4. question as to contract being within the scope of authority of agent should have been submitted to the jury.....  | 1756 |
| 5. after sale of corporate property where control of it is to be retained by the directors and the stock not transferred until after payment of purchase price, corporation is liable for claims for labor and material for operation and repair of mill contracted by the purchaser as manager..... | 2037 |
| 6. property of corporation is not conveyed by transfer of stock.....   | 2037 |
| 7. purchaser was an implied agent authorized to charge the property for repairs and operation expenses.....  | 2037 |
| 8. a minority of stockholders may sue in equity where fraud or conflicting interest of directors cause them to refuse to sue to protect the interest of stockholders.....  | 2058 |
| 9. stockholders having for years acquiesced in reduction of dividends declared are estopped to recover original amount.....  | 2058 |
| 10. no misappropriation of capital stock in particular case.....   | 2058 |
| 11. conveyance made by directors of corporation in excess of their authority may be set aside.....   | 2058 |
| 12. ten years' statute of limitation no bar to setting aside such conveyance.....  | 2058 |
| 13. relation between vendor and vendee akin to that of landlord and tenant.....  | 2058 |
| 14. president of corporation owning an individual interest in land and conveying entire tract estops his heirs from claiming same..  | 2191 |
| 15. statute of limitation also bars their recovery.....  | 2191 |

COSTS—See Passway, 6.

COUNTY ATTORNEY—

- |   |      |
|---|------|
| 1. county attorney not entitled to commissions on fines assessed after his term of office expires.....  | 1802 |
| 2. agreement between Commonwealth attorney and attorney for railroad company as to compromise of indictments not legal and does not affect fees of county attorney..... | 1802 |

CRIMINAL LAW—See Appeals, 25; Continuance, 7, 8; Evidence, 30, 31, 32, 33, 42, 43, 44, 45; Indictment, 1, 6; Insurance, 13, 14, 15—

- |   |      |
|---|------|
| 1. improper instruction for the prosecution on trial of defendant charged with malicious cutting and wounding.....                | 1114 |
| 2. peace officer of one county has no authority to arrest for a misdemeanor in another county.....                                | 1114 |
| 3. proper instruction for defense where peace officer was cut while attempting to arrest without a warrant for a misdemeanor..... | 1114 |

CRIMINAL LAW—Continued.

	Page.
4. excusing juror in particular case not prejudicial to defendant . . . . .	1148
5. the length of time that transpires after making a dying declaration does not affect its competency as evidence . . . . .	1162
6. the court will determine from surrounding circumstances whether deceased believed that death was impending when he made dying declaration . . . . .	1169
7. on trial for murder evidence of difficulty on day previous to killing was competent . . . . .	1174
8. on trial of accused as principal in commission of murder, failure to instruct as to who was principal was not prejudicial . . . . .	1181
9. failure of instruction on self-defense to leave out the words without previous malice not prejudicial . . . . .	1181
10. failure to give an instruction requiring the jury to believe that deceased died within a year and a day not prejudicial . . . . .	1181
11. conduct of attorney for the Commonwealth prejudicial to the accused . . . . .	1225
12. reading of legislative journal in support of character of a witness impeached improper . . . . .	1225
13. court has a large discretion as to order of introduction of evidence. . . . .	1225
14. competent rebuttal evidence. . . . .	1225
15. proper instruction limiting the extent to which jury may consider acts and doings of co-conspirators as evidence against defendant. . . . .	1225
16. refusal of instruction as to presumption of good character of accused not prejudicial . . . . .	1226
17. direct proof of malice in shooting not required—jury may infer malice from circumstances . . . . .	1301
18. Civil Code provision as to filing petitions for rehearing does not apply to criminal proceedings. . . . .	1350
19. Court of Appeals has authority to suspend issual of mandate and grant a rehearing in a criminal case. . . . .	1350
20. unless petition is filed at the term the decision is rendered the court has no jurisdiction to grant a rehearing afterwards . . . . .	1350
21. proof failing to show county in which cutting and wounding was done no conviction can be had . . . . .	1419
22. instructions given the jury in absence of accused prejudicial . . . . .	1419
23. proper instructions given and conviction of accused charged with murder and defense of insanity . . . . .	1427
24. prejudicial error to file away an indictment when accused is present and objects to same. . . . .	1435
25. dying declaration of deceased properly admitted in particular case. . . . .	1440
26. submission of law of self-defense in separate instruction sufficient without repetition of it in other instructions. . . . .	1466
27. proper instruction for aiding and abetting commission of murder. . . . .	1466
28. in prosecution for seduction under promise of marriage particular testimony of female erroneously excluded, but not prejudicial . . . . .	1531
29. prejudicial error in failing to give an instruction to the effect that if accused in good faith offered to marry the prosecuting female witness, he should be acquitted . . . . .	1531
30. prejudicial instruction on trial for malicious shooting and wounding . . . . .	1540
31. erroneous and prejudicial instructions on the law of self-defense and defense of another. . . . .	1540
32. particulars of previous difficulty when deceased was not present incompetent. . . . .	1584
33. evidence as to previous acts and conversation of accused admitted without admonition of court prejudicial . . . . .	1585
34. such acts and conversation competent only to show state of mind of accused. . . . .	1585
35. on trial of indictment for unlawfully shooting at another without wounding the court erred in failing to include in its instruction the words "in sudden affray" . . . . .	1720
36. the instruction should have followed the statute as to self-defense . . . . .	1720
37. statute providing for unlawfully confederating with others and inflicting injuries to persons is not unconstitutional . . . . .	1726
38. instruction on self-defense in case of Oder v. Commonwealth properly refused. . . . .	1748
39. in a criminal case evidence as to statements of witness contradictory of his evidence given on the trial not admissible as substantive testimony . . . . .	1811

CRIMINAL LAW—Continued.

	Page.
40. it is only admissible to impeach the witness and the court should have so directed the jury .....	1811
41. change of venue properly refused where ill feeling of office holders to accused alleged as grounds .....	1814
42. conviction not disturbed if any evidence to support it .....	1814
43. where insanity is relied on as defense to an indictment for murder proof of hereditary taint properly admitted .....	1838
44. after witnesses, not experts, have testified as to facts, improper to ask them if there was any apparent cause for difficulties stated ..	1838
45. not error to refuse witness who was teacher of accused when a small boy to testify as to cause of violent conduct of accused to his playmates .....	1838
46. witnesses acquainted with accused competent to testify as to his sanity .....	1838
47. members of family tainted with insanity indicated by red ink on diagram of family tree properly excluded from jury .....	1838
48. proof by tradition of insanity of ancestor incompetent as such evidence is hearsay. ....	1838
49. improper testimony as to opinion of expert witness with regard to effect of excessive use of liquor in cases of hereditary insanity ...	1838
50. testimony as to manner of accused in using and keeping money competent in such case .....	1838
51. proper instruction where defense of insanity is relied on .....	1838
52. sufficiency of indictment against railroad company in this State under a lease without recording same .....	1880
53. a Commonwealth's attorney has the authority to enter an order correcting the name of a party to the indictment .....	1881
54. penalty for carrying concealed weapons not affected by the good intent or bad intent of party charged .....	1897
55. being a member of the Louisville Merchants' Detective Agency does not shield a party from penalty for carrying concealed weapons .....	1898
56. said act is unconstitutional .....	1898
57. prejudicial error not to instruct jury as to their duty where doubt exists as to degree of offense proven .....	1921
58. error in admission of evidence as to grounds for belief of insanity of accused not prejudicial .....	1974
59. instructions on voluntary and involuntary manslaughter not prejudicial .....	1985
60. drunkenness no excuse for commission of homicide .....	1985
61. evidence of drunkenness admissible as bearing on question of malice .....	1985
62. dying declaration properly admitted in evidence .....	1985
63. erroneous instruction as to what constitutes a deadly weapon .....	2050
64. improper cross-examination of defendant affecting her character ..	2117
65. improper evidence impeaching character of witness .....	2117
66. proper instruction on trial of defendant for violation of local option law. ....	2149
67. competent evidence in such case .....	2149
68. instruction under former local option law was proper .....	2149
69. no reversal had on ground that sheriff gave to the jury improper papers in their rooms .....	2204
70. such errors appearing the first time on motion for new trial, not subject to exception .....	2205
71. statement of Commonwealth's attorney as to contradictory statements made by the accused erroneously admitted as substantive testimony .....	2205
72. dying declaration competent although there is other evidence to prove facts attending the killing .....	2205
73. what formality necessary to render writing competent as dying declaration .....	2205
74. dying declaration may be proved orally .....	2205
75. a city is not liable under indictment for permitting a nuisance on private property .....	2288
76. sufficient instructions given on charge of sodomy .....	2349
77. taking money from pocket of another by stealth does not constitute robbery .....	2481
78. such act constitutes larceny .....	2482

CRIMINAL LAW—Continued.	Page.
79. force used in effort to retain stolen property does not constitute robbery.....	2482
80. when a person excused for interfering to prevent infliction of death or great bodily harm on another.....	2494
81. conviction of principal and accomplice authorized if either party fired the shot.....	2511, 2524
82. part of trial of accused conducted while his attorney was intoxicated not prejudicial in particular case....	2511
83. argument of Commonwealth's attorney improper but not prejudicial.....	2524
DAMAGES—See Boundary, 3, 5; Common Carriers, 1, 5, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 17; Contracts, 4, 5, 6, 7, 28, 29; Evidence, 88; False Imprisonment, 2, 3, 4, 5; Frauds, Statute of, 4, 5, 6; Homestead, 14; Infants, 4; Instructions, 21; Joinder of Actions; Landlord and Tenant, 9; Municipal Government, 2, 18, 20, 21, 26, 27, 28, 29; Negligence, 9; Railroads, 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 23, 25, 65, 86, 87, 88; Street Improvements, 42; Street Railways, 5; Telegraph Companies, 2; Warranty, 1—
1. when a person bitten by a dog may recover damages of the owner.....	1220
2. telephone company liable to subscriber for discontinuing use of phone without legal cause.....	1271
3. measure of damages in such case.....	1271
4. in action for personal injuries plaintiff is entitled to compensation for physical and mental suffering, also for the distorted and weakened condition in which she was left.....	1286
5. a fair association is liable in damages for breach of contract granting exclusive privilege to sell watermelons on its grounds.....	1312
6. allegation of malice in breach of contract not necessary.....	1312
7. no recovery for being harrassed, annoyed and disturbed.....	1312
8. measure of damages in such case .....	1312
9. damages recoverable by a milling company against a water company for failure to erect suitable coffer dam according to contract.....	1372
10. under same contract damages to forebay wall and wall of water way of mill properly denied.....	1372
11. improper instruction as to measure of damages for loss of time from injuries in action against railroad company .....	1464
12. petition for damages to plaintiff from location of smallpox pest-house in violation of law, insufficient on account of damages not being proximate result of acts of city.....	1484
13. recovery of damages from city by reason of raising the grade by street improvement is barred after five years, where no imperfection in the plan or construction is shown.....	1496
14. in an action for assault and battery instituted by a primary election officer rules of committee regulating conduct of election incompetent evidence.....	1513
15. evidence that the committee afterwards declared the election off was incompetent .....	1513
16. verdict for defendant in action for damages for improper location of smallpox hospital not contrary to evidence.....	1560
17. damages recoverable of warehouseman for breach of contract to renew loan of money on whisky .....	1656
18. difference between reasonable price of the whisky and the price realized at a forced sale measure of damages .....	1657
19. court should have instructed jury that they were the judges of whether appellee had exercised its right to terminate its contract after a reasonable time .....	1657
20. improper measure of compensatory damages recoverable for injury to brakeman on railroad .....	1819
21. instruction giving undue prominence to certain facts in damage suit erroneous.....	1819
22. where a contract is made in this State employing plaintiff to superintend the manufacture of a mechanical invention for a fixed period and the employer removes the manufactory out of the State, preventing him from rendering the services, he is entitled to recover for his services .....	1909
23. under such contract presumed that the services were to be rendered in this State .....	1909
24. parol evidence competent to prove where the contract was to be performed .....	1909
25. proper instruction in such case.....	1909

DAMAGES—Continued.

Pago.

26. proper damages recovered for injuries resulting from horses running off caused by defendant..... 1970
27. improper instruction as to compensatory and punitive damages recoverable for assault and battery..... 1970
28. recovery of damages for breach of contract to purchase houses and lots and good will of physician..... 1995
29. liability in damages for stacking lumber where a child six years of age was injured by falling from a pile..... 2342
30. instruction as to contributory negligence of such child improper.. 2342
31. no damages recoverable on injunction bond executed by one telephone company to restrain another from constructing a line through a city where company sought to be enjoined had no legal right to construct said line..... 2358
32. railroad company not liable in damages for causing corpse of child to be thrown from a wagon without special injury to same. 2383
33. liability of railroad company in such case is the same as to a live child..... 2383
34. a contractor for construction of tunnel on railroad not liable on particular contract for personal injuries inflicted through negligence of employes of railroad company..... 2389
35. doubts as to meaning of such contract resolved in favor of contractor..... 2389
36. profits recoverable as damages by agent for breach of contract to sell fertilizer..... 2471
37. omission of names of customers from petition erroneous but not material..... 2471
38. evidence as to amount of profits realized in a different community incompetent..... 2472

DECEDENTS' ESTATES—See Personal Representatives, 2, 3, 4; Pleading, 1, 2; Res Judicata, 8—

1. failure of personal representative to object to affidavit purging claim was a waiver of it, and a judicial sale is not invalidated... 1100
2. note executed by ancestor to heir disallowed where no consideration proven..... 1146
3. a person having a contingent interest in a decedent's estate incompetent to testify as to transaction with decedent..... 1276
4. president of bank incompetent to testify as to transaction affecting estate of decedent on question of usury..... 1436
5. amount of claim of wife against her deceased husband's estate, invested with her consent by her daughter in land, properly enforced after death of daughter.. 2020
6. claim of ownership of decedent's land by heir properly denied.... 2398
7. his claim for taxes properly allowed..... 2398
8. judgment ordering sale of decedent's land to pay debts not a clerical misprision as claim against estate for services properly continued..... 2398
9. widow can not waive her rights in decedent's estate without the consent of all the heirs..... 2421
10. widow now entitled to one-half the surplus personalty of deceased husband..... 2421
11. an heir who has given orders on an executor for payment of testator's debts estopped from showing that no demand was made of the executor..... 2500

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION—

- claim of heirs to balance due on distribution from commissioner refused after eleven years' laches..... 1919

DIVORCE—

1. divorce should have been granted a wife on account of cruelty of husband..... 2163
2. judgment denying husband a divorce on the ground of fraud and coercion in obtaining the marriage not disturbed..... 2203
3. grounds for divorce will be considered only on appeal in determining question concerning alimony and allowances..... 2417
4. divorce properly allowed husband and alimony denied the wife... 2417
5. allowance of $25 to attorney for wife not disturbed..... 2417
6. objection that such allowance made without hearing proof raised first time on appeal not considered..... 2417

DIVORCE AND ALIMONY—

1. mistreatment and neglect by husband sufficient to authorize wife to leave his home and obtain a divorce..... 1288

DIVORCE AND ALIMONY—Continued.		Page.
2. obtaining employment by the wife afterwards in other States did not constitute change of residence .....		1288
3. home of husband presumed to be residence of the wife.....		1288
4. wife entitled to reasonable allowance as alimony.....		1288
5. $1,250 additional fees for attorneys for wife allowed against her husband .....		1288
DOWER—See Title, 18—
1. wife of assignor for benefit of creditors entitled to compensation for her inchoate right of dower out of surplus after payment of debt secured by mortgage in which she joined her husband .....		257
2. execution of mortgage by husband without the wife joining therein does not bar her right of dower .....		2505
3. her signature to husband's mortgage where her name does not appear therein does not bar her right of dower.....		2505
4. service of summons upon her as a party to an action to foreclose mortgage where pleadings do not mention her inchoate right of dower does not bar her of such right.....		2505
EASEMENTS—See Contracts, 15.
ELECTIONS—See Damages, 14, 15—
1. time prescribed by statute for filing pleadings in contested election cases is mandatory.....		1090
2. reply filed in such case properly stricken from the files because not filed in time .....		1090
3. an answer setting up counter grounds of contest is sufficient although not styled a counterclaim.....		1090
4. no notice of filing of pleadings in a contested election case is required by law .....		1090
5. although there was no reply to the counter charges in the answer contestant should have been permitted to prove the allegations of his petition and a refusal to hear such evidence was error .....		1090
6. it was error to render judgment in favor of contestee on the face of the papers .....		1090
7. in contested election case commissioners appointed by court to count the ballots guilty of misconduct in holding secret meeting when they were opening and counting the returns and in refusing the parties and their legal representatives to be present .....		1100
8. returns of an election are under the statute evidence in contested election cases for the purposes of trial .....		1100
9. such ballots are the primary and best evidence .....		1100
10. but where they have apparently been tampered with the burden of proof is on party relying on such ballots to establish their integrity.....		1100
11. after ballots had been counted by commissioners and answer charging that they were altered and changed should have been permitted to be filed.....		1100
12. general rules of filing pleadings in given time does not apply to such a case.....		1100
13. questioned ballots not certified as required by law not counted...		1100
14. law as to certifying questioned ballots is mandatory .....		1100
15. vote of idiot and lunatic should not be deducted where there is insufficient evidence as to how they voted.....		1101
16. their statements as to how they voted were incompetent .....		1101
17. vote of a resident of the precinct for the time required by law in properly deducted from appellant.....		1101
18. vote of persons not legal residents of the precinct properly rejected.....		1101
19. school census not competent evidence as to age of voter.....		1101
20. a ballot marked with a pencil within the circle under the Republican device, also with cross marks with a stencil in the square of candidates for all except county attorney, should have been counted for appellant.....		1101
21. election returns from a precinct improperly rejected where the election officers complied with the law except signing the returns in the absence of a charge of fraud in particular case.....		1206
22. ballots marked with a stencil in circle under device of regular Republican ticket, also in the circle under device of independent Republican candidate for police judge, improperly rejected.....		1206
23. ballots improperly rejected because not signed by the clerk.....		1206
24. a ballot marked in the circle under the Republican device and a cross mark made under the name of B. on the Democratic ticket should be counted for the Republican candidate except as to B. ....		1206

ELECTIONS—Continued.		Page.
25. a ballot marked with a blurred figure under the Republican device should have been counted for that ticket .....		1206
26. a ballot torn on the side properly counted .....		1206
27. a ballot with two ink blots in the back improperly rejected .....		1206
28. ballots showing that they have been tampered with properly rejected .....		1206
29. candidate in primary election not entitled to mandatory injunction to compel count of ballots where no contest is pending .....		1505
30. petition is also defective as it does not charge either fraud or mistake of officers of election or of the committee .....		1505
31. a primary election for nomination of State officers may be held under the statute .....		2135
32. such primary election must be conducted according to such statute .....		2135, 2141
33. committee may be compelled by mandamus to place name of candidate on ballot .....		2135
34. committee can not raise the question as to eligibility of candidate .....		2135
35. courts can not enjoin the holding of a primary election to nominate State officers .....		2141
36. calling a primary election is within the control of party authorities .....		2141
37. election of police judge declared void on account of fraud .....		1759
ELECTRICITY—
high degree of care required of persons furnishing electricity to protect others from injury .....		1448
ESTOPPEL—See Corporations, 14; Dower, 3; Decedents' Estates, 11; Husband and Wife, 7, 14; Insurance, 30; Liens, 10; Married Women; Municipal Government, 17; Notaries, 3; Partnership, 8, 9; Street Improvements, 23; Sureties, 6; Taxation, 2—
1. appellee estopped from withdrawing donation of land for railroad after standing by and permitting preparation and expenditure of money on same .....		1762
2. after appeal prosecuted to Court of Appeals from judgment for rents, claim for years prior to that suit properly rejected .....		1913
3. failure of creditor, with knowledge of bankrupt proceeding against his debtor, to present his claim bars him from issuing execution on same .....		2459
ERRATUM—
After the form containing Shannon v. Padgett, page 1281, had been printed the opinion was changed by substituting the word "satisfaction" for "judgment" in the third line.
EVIDENCE—See Agents, 2, 3; Bills and Notes, 5, 16; Boundary, 7; Common Carrier, 3, 4, 9, 18; Continuance, 11; Contracts, 30; Conveyances, 11; Criminal Law, 5, 6, 7, 15, 21, 28, 32, 33, 34, 39, 40, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 57, 58, 60, 61, 62, 64, 65, 67, 71, 72, 73, 74; Damages, 38; Decedents' Estates, 3; Elections, 8, 9, 10, 13, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20; Forcible Entry, 2; Fraud, 8, 9, 10; Fraud, Statute of, 2, 3; Husband and Wife, 2; Insurance, 9, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 56, 57, 58; Landlord and Tenant, 7, 8; Limitation, Statutes of, 2; Malicious Prosecution, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11; Master and Servant, 12, 13; Municipal Taxation, 2, 3; Negligence, 1, 2, 6; Passway, 3; Railroads, 5, 4, 13, 14, 18, 19, 20; Title, 10, 11, 14; Warranty, 2, 3, 4; Wills, 16, 17, 18, 24—
1. statements of accused made before the killing, that he intended to kill some one, was competent .....		1144
2. competent evidence to contradict the accused .....		1144
3. evidence of flight of the accused is competent .....		1144
4. character of accused who testifies for himself may be impeached the same as any other witness .....		1144
5. rule as to admission of evidence where witness violates rule as to separation of witnesses .....		1171
6. error to read from private catalogue the history of the sire of a horse injured .....		1273
7. witness might state the history of the sire from personal knowledge, but he could not read to the jury a newspaper article or other publication reciting the facts .....		1273
8. valuation of horses in printed bill of lading does not limit recovery for their injury .....		1273
9. official stenographer's report of evidence of deceased witness given on former trial properly admitted as evidence .....		1317

EVIDENCE—Continued.

	Page.
10. parol evidence incompetent to prove that a written agreement for transfer of notes and accounts as a security was an absolute transfer where no fraud or mistake is charged . . . . .	1323
11. simultaneous contract was without consideration and void . . . . .	1323
12. proper instruction as to claim of attorney for reasonable compensation . . . . .	1323
13. agreement signed by contestant of will to set aside the will and distribute property competent to show bias . . . . .	1326
14. incompetent evidence as to value of time lost by physician by reason of injuries received. . . . .	1403
15. details of previous fight between third parties not prejudicial to accused who was not connected with it . . . . .	1409
16. wife competent witness to prove dying declaration of husband . . . . .	1440
17. evidence in mitigation of damages in action of assault and battery although no plea of self-defense filed. . . . .	1514
18. witness against accused testifying as to facts occurring at the killing properly contradicted by her statements that she was not present. . . . .	1621
19. in action for injuries resulting in death, caused by train at a crossing, error to admit evidence as to general reputation of deceased for sobriety . . . . .	1687
20. negligence of employes of railroad company at one time is not evidence to prove that they were negligent at the time of the injury. . . . .	1687
21. declaration of brother of injured boy in his presence as to his negligence, and not denied, competent evidence . . . . .	1796
22. rule as to admission of statements of others as to conduct of party in his presence and not denied . . . . .	1796
23. testimony of president and stockholders of a bank as to statements made by a deceased debtor incompetent. . . . .	1800
24. experts competent to testify as to comparison of handwriting of decedent . . . . .	1800
25. statement of employe of train made some time after the injury incompetent, not being part of the res gestæ . . . . .	1808
26. incompetent evidence as to previous difficulty between two sons of accused and the deceased . . . . .	1811
27. evidence in rebuttal to prove admission of accused as to number of shots fired by him incompetent . . . . .	1811
28. competency of parol evidence to explain meaning of wills . . . . .	1965
29. evidence in contradiction of witness who fails to sustain ground of attachment incompetent . . . . .	2048
30. practical demonstration by expert witness as to manner of filling and lighting lamps properly refused . . . . .	2095
31. such demonstrations are within the sound discretion of the lower court . . . . .	2095
32. evidence sufficient to sustain conviction of defendant for committing nuisance by polluting stream with offal from cattle pens. . . . .	2154
33. dying declaration written out, approved and signed properly admitted in evidence . . . . .	2173
34. court erred in refusing to grant continuance on account of absence of eyewitness to the killing . . . . .	2173
35. error to refuse to admit the affidavit as the evidence of the absent witness . . . . .	2173
36. on question whether money paid by testator to his daughter was an ademption of a legacy the executor and his surety are competent witnesses. . . . .	2253
37. all devisees are competent to prove declarations of testator . . . . .	2253
38. in action for damages for malicious shooting and wounding evidence of previous threats and hostile demonstrations by plaintiff admissible . . . . .	2415
39. improper instruction limiting right to shoot where there was no other safe means of escape. . . . .	2415
40. expert evidence incompetent to decide disputed questions of fact. . . . .	2455
41. on trial for murder evidence that a sister of deceased and the accused had been living in improper relations was competent . . . . .	2498
42. where the proof shows the accused to have been the aggressor evidence of previous threats by the deceased were incompetent . . . . .	2494
43. in such case evidence that deceased was a violent and dangerous man was incompetent . . . . .	2494
44. in such case evidence that deceased usually carried deadly weapons was incompetent. . . . .	2494

EVIDENCE—Continued.	Page.
45. on trial for murder, after burglarious entry into house, proof of other burglaries committed in same neighborhood competent.	2511, 2524
46. such evidence tends to show motive and to identify accused.	2511, 2524
47. confession of accused sufficiently corroborated.	2511, 2524
EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF—See Appeals, 19, 20, 29—
bill of exceptions not signed by the judge not considered as a part of the record.	1973
EXECUTIONS—See Estoppel, 3; Homestead, 18; Husband and Wife, 12, 13; Liens, 2, 3; Surety, 1—
1. reversal of judgment under which real estate was sold entitled the judgment debtor to a return of the property.	1507
2. purchaser chargeable with rents collectible during time he had possession, but entitled to return of money paid with interest; also for repairs, taxes, etc., paid during the time.	1507
3. no objection that part of purchase money were fees due as attorney.	1507
4. an execution can not be levied on land purchased by debtor at judicial sale which has not been conveyed to him.	1521
5. debtor has only an equitable title which can be subjected to a debt only by equitable action.	1521
6. only lands to which debtor has the legal title can be subjected under an execution.	1521
7. agreement on part of purchaser of land sold under execution made after expiration of right to redeem is without consideration and unenforceable.	1540
FACTS—
1. rule as to finding of facts by a chancellor in equitable action.	1824
2. finding of facts by court in common law action not disturbed unless flagrantly against evidence.	2296, 2362
FALSE IMPRISONMENT—
1. fiscal court at a meeting called by a majority of the justices of the peace has no authority to order arrest of a member of said court when county judge refuses to act.	1832
2. all the justices acting as the court are liable in damages for issuing such void order of arrest.	1832
3. such writ does not protect the deputy sheriff serving same.	1832
4. the sheriff is also liable for such illegal acts of his deputy.	1832
5. a writ issued by a court without jurisdiction affords no protection to an officer.	1832
6. officer is bound to know the jurisdiction of the court issuing writs which are placed in his hands.	1832
FISCAL COURTS—See False Imprisonment, 1, 2, 3—
1. sale of land by agent of fiscal court was a valid contract and entitled the vendee to a conveyance.	1406
2. ratification of acts of agent.	1406
3. resale of same land under order of fiscal court was void.	1406
4. after presentation of claim to fiscal court of health officer for services in smallpox epidemic, action may be instituted against county in circuit court.	1980
5. such claim is limited to amount presented to fiscal court.	1980
6. appeal from the fiscal court not the only remedy.	1980
FORCIBLE DETAINER—
if officer fails to execute first writ of restitution of property ordered in forcible entry proceeding, a second writ may be properly given him.	2340
FORCIBLE ENTRY—See Landlord and Tenant, 5—
1. a person who enters into possession of a part of a large tract of land with the intention of taking possession of the whole may maintain action of forcible entry against a person interfering with that possession.	2175
2. in this action title papers are competent evidence only to prove extent of possession.	2175
FRANCHISES—See Municipal Taxation, 20, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27; Taxation, 1.
FRAUD—See Conveyances, 7; Divorce, 2; Municipal Government, 32; Pleading, 31; Title, 8, 9—
1. subscription of stock in a title company and notes given therefor cancelled on ground of fraud practiced on the subscriber.	1111
2. notes given therefor not placed on the footing of foreign bills of exchange.	1111

FRAUD—Continued.

	Page.
8. subscriber not estopped by his conduct from obtaining a rescission.	1111
4. fraud practiced by assignee for benefit of creditors to obtain release of mortgage indemnifying a surety .....	1292
4. transfer of note by assignee did not vest the transferee with it free of the mortgage.....	1292
6. no action can be maintained by the transferee on the note .....	1292
7. fraudulent transfer of trust property by assignee for benefit of creditors .....	1292
8. action for fraud in sale of bank stock not sustained by evidence...	1290
9. representations as to value of bank stock not actionable fraud.....	1290
10. such representations made after consummation of trade not competent evidence .....	1290
11. conveyance of land from father to son properly cancelled as executed through fraud or mistake.....	2198
12. deed from wife to husband set aside on account of fraud and undue influence.....	2242
13. conveyance of land, store and stock of goods not induced by fraud.	2328
14. conveyance of property by an infirm old woman through fraud and undue influence properly set aside .....	2528

FRAUDS, STATUTE OF—

1. parol sale of land can not defeat execution sale.....	1884
2. a description of land as one-third of all the real and personal estate is sufficient to be enforced.....	1642
3. parol testimony allowed to designate the particular property described and identified by the writing .....	1642
4. damages for breach of verbal contract to purchase plaintiff's oyster store and give him employment allowed, although verbal agreement was not to be performed within one year.....	3024
5. statute of frauds not intended to enable a party to practice a fraud on another .....	2024
6. the law implies an agreement to pay to plaintiff the value of his stock of goods and the loss of the good will of the business.....	2024
7. statute of frauds relied on to recover land waived by tender of deed.	2040
8. specific performance of contract to convey land to railroad company for depot purposes enforced.....	2040

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—See Husband and Wife, 24; Limitation, Statute of, 1, 2—

1. a conveyance of property to defeat payment of a legacy fraudulent and void .....	1276
2. conveyance of property by wife to trustee for her husband set aside because made under influence of her husband .....	1343
3. burden is upon grantee to show that the wife understood the nature of the transaction.....	1344
4. in particular case transaction shows scheme to deceive.....	1344
5. sale of storehouse and goods, where purchaser pays valuable consideration without notice of fraudulent intent of vendor, can not be set aside .....	1389
6. transfer of lien note for $600 to a partner fraudulent as to creditors of firm because paid out of means of partner.....	1389
7. partner subrogated to lien of original holder .....	1389
8. sale and conveyance of land by father to son fraudulent as to creditors of father. ....	1418
9. conveyance of land by a debtor to his brother not fraudulent in particular case.....	1551
10. money advanced by brother without notice of any fraudulent intent of debtor created a mortgage on land .....	1551
11. an attacking creditor is entitled to a second lien on said land ...	1551
12. a person having a claim for damages or assault and battery constituted him a creditor .....	1551
13. conveyance of land by father to son fraudulent.....	1565
14. conveyance of property by a father to his son not fraudulent in particular case.....	1824
15. in action to recover judgment on a debt wife of debtor and a third person may be joined as defendants for purpose of setting aside fraudulent conveyance to wife .....	1960
16. return of no property found unnecessary before institution of action to set aside such conveyance .....	1960
17. conveyance in particular case properly set aside.....	1960

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES—Continued.		Page.
18.	suit allowed to set aside conveyance for fraud alleged to have been committed more than five years.....	2011
19.	record of deed not constructive notice to creditors.....	2011
20.	deed of property to an old woman procured by fraud of her brother-in-law corrected.....	2013
21.	holder of second mortgage who releases same to enable her son to borrow money on first mortgage can not enforce against purchaser agreement of son to execute to her a second mortgage.....	2100
22.	after several years proceedings in court concerning conveyances presumed to be regular and free from fraud.....	2166
23.	conveyance of land in compliance with previous contract not fraudulent as to creditors.....	2469
GAMING—See Parties to Actions, 4—
1.	one jointly interested in setting up a gaming place can not recover against his partner's money lost at play on the ground that he was invited or persuaded to play ..	1680
2.	a creditor of his can not sue under the statute and occupy a better position ..	1680
3.	a wife as a creditor can not maintain such action.....	1680
GIFT—
	note held by obligee at time of his death not valid as a gift to maker as there was no delivery to donee ..	1474
GUARANTY—
	guarantor of liability having waived notice of its acceptance, can not escape liability on want of notice.....	2003
GUARDIAN AD LITEM—See Infants, 6—allowance for services of guardian ad litem should be made in lower court ..	1753
GUARDIAN AND WARD—
1.	mortgage to indemnify surety of guardian enforced as a prior lien on land.....	1389
2.	surety on guardian's bond can be released only in the manner provided by statute.....	1389
3.	unless proper method of release of surety adopted, new bond of guardian regarded as cumulative security.....	1389
4.	guardian not permitted to charge her wards with note for supplies furnished entire family in particular case ..	1729
5.	rent of wards' land equals supplies furnished them ..	1729
6.	proper procedure for appointment of guardian for infant over fourteen years of age ..	1963
7.	liability of guardian for interest ..	2220
8.	duty of father to support his children.....	2230
9.	when a father as guardian may permit his ward to expend beyond the income of his estate ..	2220
10.	when a father not permitted to charge his child's estate for board.....	2220
11.	when guardian should be charged reasonable rent for occupancy of infant's house.....	2220
12.	particular claim by father of infants where he was their guardian for their board disallowed.....	2301
13.	income from property of wards properly charged with cost of their education, clothing and medical bills ..	2301
14.	duty of father to provide for his infant children ..	2301
15.	Logan County Court had jurisdiction to appoint a guardian of a waif who was injured on a railroad track ..	2409
HEIRS—See Taxation, 25.
HOMESTEAD—See Husband and Wife, 1, 22, 24; Pleading, 17; Sheriffs, 2—
1.	mortgage of wife presumed that she only released her dower interest and not homestead ..	1239
2.	wife by failure to renounce will can not claim homestead ..	1239
3.	her failure to renounce will can not affect rights of unmarried infant children to homestead.....	1239
4.	homestead not improved by means of husband beyond value of $1,000 ..	1534
5.	a pauper lunatic who was sent to asylum from Jefferson county and who had a family was entitled to a homestead ..	1614
6.	said homestead not subject after his death to claim for his support in the asylum.....	1614
7.	such claim is not a debt ..	1614

HOMESTEAD—Continued.

Page.

8. where land allotted to widow and children of decedent as a homestead is worth only $600, they are entitled to $400 additional out of the other land.....1702
9. how said sum should be invested .....1702
10. where the owner of a homestead is confined in a lunatic asylum his wife may claim the homestead and exemptions for him..... 1787
11. a wife may claim homestead in her land for benefit of her husband and family..... 1940
12. duty of husband to provide homestead, but if he fails the wife may claim homestead in her land.....1940
13. temporary abandonment of homestead by wife does not prevent her from claiming same.....1940
14. damages recoverable for unlawful deprivation of homestead..... 2387
15. claim for money used in purchase of homestead will prevail against claim for homestead .....2378
16. said claim was a pre-existing debt.....2378
17. in particular case owner of homestead had not abandoned same...2508
18. motion is proper remedy to set aside execution sale of homestead..2508

HUSBAND AND WIFE—See Decedents' Estates, 9, '10; Fraud, 12; Gaming, 3; Homestead, 3, 8, 9, 10; Insurance, 34; Limitation, Statute of, 1, 2, 34; Parties to Actions, 2; Title—

1. a wife being a contestant of a will and having testified, her husband could not testify although he was an attending physician of testator.....1326
2. wife competent to prove dying declaration of husband. ....1440
3. where name of wife does not appear in a mortgage as one of grantors with her husband there has been no relinquishment of homestead in the land .....1584
4. a compromise of a divorce suit is a sufficient consideration for a settlement of property on the children. ....1641
5. lots of land purchased by husband with separate funds of the wife and conveyed to her not subject to execution for husband's debts.1682
6. husband had not converted choses in action of wife to his use... 1682
7. wife of debtor had not misled purchasers as to ownership of property .....1682
8. record of deed was notice to them of her ownership .....1682
9. creditors of husband not permitted to subject property of wife to satisfaction of his debts in particular case .....1871
10. proof shows that all the property in question belongs to wife..... 1871
11. judgment by default on note executed by husband and wife since 1894 is binding on the wife.....1940
12. execution on same properly levied on her land .....1940
13. sale under said execution vested purchaser with title .....1940
14. wife having failed to set up defense in former action that she was only surety, estopped to urge such defense afterwards.... 1940
15. a married woman being a member of a partnership, has authority to purchase real property although her husband may object to same ..... 1947
16. addition by husband to trust funds of his wife for purchase of land, in which she has life estate and his daughter the remainder, gave him no lien on the land for return of his money.....1947
17. presumed that this was a gift to his wife and child .....2016
18. no trust resulted in his favor .. ..... 2016
19. wife had no power to make enforceable agreement for return of the money.....2016
20. donation of money to wife becomes her separate estate under the statute .. ..... 2100
21. act of March 15, 1894, did not change the statute of limitation as to rights of married woman to recover her land... ..2427
22. husband may claim a homestead in his right by curtesy in his wife's land.....2445
23. he may sell such right and creditors can not complain.....2445
24. but the sale may be set aside as a fraud on creditors as to excess over $1,000.....2445

IMPROVEMENTS—

1. where purchaser of lot at judicial sale under mistake as to title makes improvements, no damages recoverable of him for removing same ..... 2090
2. purchaser not entitled to recover compensation for improvements under occupying claimant's statute..... 2090

- INDICTMENT—See Conveyances, 8; Criminal Law, 52, 53— Page
1. insufficient indictment for obtaining money under false pretenses. 1161
  2. filing away indictment against objection of accused is prejudicial. 1425
  3. objection to indictment for murder because it does not charge that offense was committed feloniously waived because not made on trial. 1441
  4. insufficient indictment for violation of "long and short haul" statute. 1883
  5. insufficient indictment against a railroad company for discrimination in freight rates. 1886, 1887
  6. sufficiency of indictment for violation of local option law. 2149
  7. sufficient indictment for violation of local option law. 2257
  8. defective indictment for fraudulently disposing of property of another. 2352
- INFANTS—See Joint Tenants, 4, 5, 6—
1. answer by guardian cured defective service of process on infant and perfected title to infant's land. 1389
  2. guardian properly bid at sale of infants' property by permission of court. 1423
  3. infants were properly plaintiffs in action represented by their guardian. 1423
  4. recovery of damages by infant for loss of time before he arrives at twenty-one years of age not erroneous where his mother consents to the recovery. 1822
  5. judgment against nonresident infants, where only attorney appointed to correspond with them, is not void. 1923
  6. failure to appoint guardian ad litem in such case did not render judgment void. 1923
  7. partition of land of infant not set aside on charge of relation and disqualification of commissioners. 1961
  8. reversible error in appointment of guardian ad litem. 1966
  9. purchase of land of infant by statutory guardian improper. 1966
  10. sale of infant's land properly set aside in such case. 1966
  11. property of infant not bound by defective proceedings to secure mortgage on its real property. 2141
  12. but property of adults bound by their mortgage. 2141
- INJUNCTION—See Contracts, 13, 27; Damages, 31; Elections, 35, 36; Parties to Actions, 7, 8; Schools, 4; Street Improvements, 40; Telephones, 1, 2—
1. no injunction will be granted to prevent the proposed operation of a base ball park near a residence. 1305
  2. base ball is not per se nuisance. 1305
  3. injunction will lie to prevent base ball playing if it becomes a nuisance. 1305
  4. injunction lies to prevent closing of an alley which is appurtenant to a dwelling house. 1305
  5. an injunction does not lie against members of board of public works before their induction into office to prevent removal of chief engineer. 1770
  6. before their induction into office the members of the board of public works were mere private citizens. 1770
  7. injunction properly granted to prevent closing an alley. 2159
  8. owner of land not in the actual possession may maintain action to restrain a trespass or injury to same. 2189
  9. operation of a boom properly enjoined. 2383
  10. joint conveyance of a river bank for purpose of tying logs and rafts does not authorize operation of a boom. 2383
  11. sale of waterworks by collector for city taxes enjoined. 2530
- INSTRUCTIONS—See Banks, 1; Contracts, 3; Criminal Law, 8, 9, 10, 15, 16, 22, 25, 27, 29, 30, 35, 37, 38, 51, 66, 68, 76; Damages, 11, 19, 21, 27, 30; Evidence, 12, 39; Insurance, 21, 22, 46; Malicious Prosecution, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 12; Master and Servant, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 33; Municipal Government, 3; Office and Officer, 4; Passway, 5; Pleading, 3; Railroads, 35, 36, 44, 45, 46; Street Railways, 7, 11, 12; Telegraph Companies, 2, 4; Telephone Companies, 7; Turnpikes, 4—
1. in a civil case a party who offers no instruction can not complain of an instruction given. 1160
  2. improper instruction in self-defense, but not prejudicial in particular case. 1174
  3. an instruction as to liability for negligence of fellow servants improper in particular case. 1283

INSTRUCTIONS—Continued.

Page.

4. instruction for shooting and wounding in sudden heat and passion not erroneous ..... 1301
5. omission of the word "previous" before "malice" not prejudicial. 1301
6. in action for assault and battery of officer of primary election an instruction resting the authority of officer on the rules of the committee was erroneous..... 1518
7. such instruction should have defined the limitation on the authority of the officer as prescribed by statute..... 1518
8. duties of officers of primary election defined..... 1514
9. under the pleadings and facts plaintiff was entitled to an instruction requiring the jury to give him reasonable damages for pulling him off the steps..... 1514
10. plaintiff was entitled to an instruction authorizing punitive damages..... 1514
11. proper instructions where several are charged with committing an assault and battery..... 1514
12. measure of damages for permanent injuries resulting from railroad collision..... 1566
13. proper instruction defining negligence, gross negligence and ordinary care..... 1566
14. instruction as to conspiracy not proper where accused proven to have committed the murder..... 1621
15. harmless instruction as to permanency of injury... 1637
16. proper instructions on voluntary manslaughter and self-defense... 1731
17. use of word "feloniously" in instruction for manslaughter unnecessary..... 1731
18. use of word "feloniously" only required in indictment for murder and in a murder instruction..... 1731
19. instruction assuming that trunks containing dental instruments were baggage of a passenger was prejudicial..... 1731
20. proper instruction defining a deadly weapon..... 2050
21. erroneous instructions as to measure of damages, but not prejudicial in particular case..... 2339
22. misleading instructions in action for damages from negligence of railroad employees..... 2410
23. prejudicial error to instruct jury that it was duty of city to keep its sidewalks "safe" for pedestrians..... 2448
24. duty of jury to determine whether a plow on a sidewalk leaves sidewalk in reasonably safe condition for pedestrians..... 2448
25. rule as to when peremptory instruction should be given..... 2455
26. erroneous instructions in action for damages not prejudicial..... 2518

INSURANCE—See Partnership, 1—

1. suit to rescind a contract of life insurance for fraudulent representations made in obtaining same must be brought within a reasonable time ..... 1086
2. delay in filing suit to cancel same until after the death of the insured and until after payment of the policy was unreasonable... 1086
3. policy may be cancelled for fraud notwithstanding the incontestable clause in said policy..... 1080
4. waiver of prompt payment of installments of premiums by act of insurance company..... 1452
5. parties have right to make any conditions as to liability for insurance and company may waive conditions made for its benefit. 1452
6. check for premium not evidence of payment, but evidence of good faith of insured..... 1452
7. misdescription in policy as to location of insured personal property does not prevent recovery of loss where agent writing policy had full knowledge as to location of property..... 1461
8. mistake in policy as to location of property corrected..... 1461
9. parol evidence admissible to correct such mistake..... 1461
10. company had right to refuse to deliver policy of life insurance unless the insured was in good health..... 1548
11. injuries from pistol shot wounds inflicted after application made constituted sufficient grounds for refusing to deliver policy..... 1544
12. no delivery of policy in particular case..... 1544
13. agents of foreign insurance company properly subjected to penalty for carrying on business without license..... 1590
14. particular company not exempt as a fraternal society..... 1591

INSURANCE—Continued.

	Page.
15. failure to file articles of incorporation in office of secretary of state was a failure to comply with the law.....	1591
16. forfeiture of policy for nonpayment of premium not waived by company in particular case. ....	1638
17. sickness of insured does not avail insured as excuse from paying premium.....	1638
18. liability of insurance company on certificate of life insurance not released where neither certificate nor application contains a condition releasing company in case of suicide or taking life while sane or insane .....	1787
19. such condition existing in the by-laws does not affect the liability.	1787
20. life insurance company relieved from liability where insured takes his own life while sane.....	1787
21. proper instruction to be given the jury in such case .....	1787
22. in an action on a policy of fire insurance for a total loss, an arbitration is not a condition precedent to an action.....	1850
23. question as to whether a loss is total not required to be submitted to appraisers .....	1850
24. proper instruction defining total loss. ....	1850
25. statute fixes the recovery where the loss is total.....	1850
26. letter written by an adjuster which was read to the county judge incompetent.....	1851
27. witnesses properly permitted to state in detail what was necessary to restore the building and the percentage of building destroyed.....	1851
28. but question of cost properly excluded.. ..	1851
29. agent of accident insurance company waived condition forbidding insurance of cripples .....	1856
30. company estopped to deny its liability after such waiver.....	1856
31. statement of agent after the issual of the certificate as to his knowledge of assured being a cripple incompetent as against the company .....	1856
32. proof shows that policy of insurance on life of agent was not delivered and was cancelled .....	1867
33. pocket memorandum of agent not competent to prove payment of premium.....	1867
34. widow of insured incompetent to testify as to communications between her and her husband .....	1867
35. attorney of deceased agent incompetent to testify as to statements made by him as affecting the company .....	1867
36. general agent of company who is a policy holder not disqualified as a witness on account of interest. ....	1867
37. an interest that would disqualify a witness must be direct and certain .....	1867
38. testimony of witness that deceased agent was in possession of the policy and claiming it was competent.....	1867
39. but statements of witness as to what other agents said about dividing a policy into smaller ones is incompetent .....	1867
40. a policy of life insurance can not be forfeited for nonpayment of interest on loan. ....	1930
41. loss under policy in a mutual benefit fire insurance association occurring after death of the insured not collectible by the heir... ..	1956
42. the heir did not become a member of the association .....	1956
43. contract to become member of co-operative fire insurance company not completed.....	2133
44. company not liable for loss of property under such contract .....	2133
45. where copy of application and medical examination read in evidence not prejudicial to refuse to permit doctor to testify as to sores on body of insured .....	2260
46. erroneous instructions as to misstatements as to age not prejudicial.....	2260
47. policy providing for extended insurance not forfeited in particular case.....	2291
48. payment of premiums for following year not a consideration precedent to right of assured to receive dividend already earned....	2291
49. policy not forfeited for nonpayment of interest on loan .....	2291
50. where a company issues a policy of insurance on life of a wife and accepts note of husband for premium and executes a receipt for the premium, it can not escape liability on the policy .....	2452

INSURANCE—Continued.

Page.

51. clause in policy forfeiting same in case premium note not paid applies alone to notes executed by the assured. .... 2452
52. no forfeiture of policy where company accepts note of third party for premium ... 2452
53. instruction in action on policy of life insurance properly submitted to jury the question of intent with which assured took his life on issue of suicide. .... 2455
54. insurance company has the burden on such issue. .... 2455
55. court properly refused to give a peremptory instruction to find for defendant in particular case. .... 2455
56. opinion of coroner as to whether the death wound of assured was self-inflicted incompetent ... 2455
57. copy of coroner's inquest not competent evidence ... 2455
58. proofs of death prepared and presented to the company incompetent as substantive evidence ... 2455
59. forfeiture of policy of fire insurance for nonpayment of premium waived by conduct of agent ... 2483

INTEREST—See Appeals, 16; Construction of Statutes, 79; Executions, 2; Insurance, 40; New Trial, 4; Wills, 1—

1. no interest allowed on claim where no demand made of personal representative within one year ... 1289
2. a contractor is entitled to interest on his money from the date of acceptance of his work by the architect. .... 1633

JOINDER OF ACTIONS—See Slander, 2—

- persons who jointly commit a tort may be joined as defendants in an action for damages. .... 2519

JOINT TENANTS—See Limitation, Statutes of, 10; Receivers, 5—

1. conveyance by a joint tenant of a specific portion of joint lands is not void. .... 1200
2. the other joint tenants could join in the conveyance and vest the purchaser with title ... 1200
3. but can not do so to the prejudice of another purchaser of a specific boundary. .... 1200
4. in action against infants as joint tenants for partition of land judgment against them without service, either actual or constructive, is void ... 1481
5. in a subsequent suit to quiet title defect not cured by answer of guardian consenting to allotment. .... 1482
6. proof showing advantage of allotment to infants may be made in second suit. .... 1482

JUDGMENT—See Infants, 5, 6; Pleading, 16, 27; Writ of Prohibition, 1—

1. if debt established judgment requiring defendants who have executed refunding bond to pay into court sufficient money to satisfy same proper instead of selling land of party indemnified. ... 1587
2. void judgment properly vacated. .... 1735
3. manner in which infants and nonresidents may set aside judgment for sale of property ... 1923
4. judgment binding unless set aside in the manner directed by the Code. .... 1923
5. judgment refusing to cancel endorsement of satisfaction of judgment upheld ... 1934
6. sufficiency of petition on foreign judgment. .... 2004
7. defense that transcript is not entire record not available in Court of Appeals when not made in lower court ... 2004
8. judgment rendered on note before disposing of demurrer pending was premature. .... 2268

JUDICIAL SALES—See Decedents' Estates, 1; Fraudulent Conveyances, 22; Infants, 1, 9, 10; Lunatics, 3; Parties to Actions, 3—

1. description of the land in the petition and judgment which follows the description in the deed is sufficient. .... 1109
2. appraisement of land in action on a debt created in 1873 was not necessary ... 1110
3. judicial sale properly set aside on account of insufficient description of land ... 1325
4. lot forty feet wide presumed to be indivisible ... 1329
5. where sale of land was made to satisfy lienholders the owner can not complain that no claim or mortgage was filed by lienholder as court reserved distribution of fund until proper pleadings filed. ... 1382

JUDICIAL SALES—Continued.*Page.

6. exception to sale on ground that no mortgage was filed waived by failure to object to the judgment ..... 1382
7. mortgage found in the record although not marked filed is sufficient ..... 1382
8. not necessary that order of sale should direct the commissioner to have land appraised before sale. .... 1382
9. proof shows sale was properly made as joint property was indivisible. .... 1423
10. judicial sale not set aside on sole ground of inadequacy of price. .... 1423
11. guardian who had been permitted by order of court to bid at sale of infant's property properly did so. .... 1423
12. appeal from order confirming judicial sale where neither the purchaser nor his transferees are parties properly dismissed. .... 1752
13. inadequacy of price no ground for setting aside judicial sale ..... 1920
14. sale in particular case not set aside on ground of unfriendliness of appraiser ..... 1920
15. sale set aside on ground of inadequacy of price and misapprehension of appellant's agent ..... 2413
16. second sale should be started at advanced bid ..... 2413
17. no appraisement necessary where sale of property for division between joint owners ..... 2413

JURISDICTION—See Appeals, 13, 16; Attorneys, 1, 2; Common Carriers, 15, 16; Fiscal Courts, 4, 5, 6; Guardian and Ward, 15; Title, 8, 9—

1. an executor who qualified in another State where the testator died, and who brings assets into this State, may be sued here. .... 1331
2. objection to jurisdiction after entering demurrer to petition was too late. .... 1447
3. after return of no property found an action to set aside a deed to land as fraudulent properly instituted in county where land lies and judgment was rendered. .... 1564
4. State court has no jurisdiction to try a case after filing of petition and bond for removal to Federal court on ground of diverse citizenship. .... 2044
5. objection to jurisdiction can not be raised by demurrer to petition where it does not show the county in which a contract was made ..... 2471

JURY—

1. a plurality of defendants on a trial against them together are not entitled to a separate panel of the jury. .... 2520
2. a plurality of plaintiffs or defendants constitute but one party to a suit ..... 2520

LACHES—See Municipal Taxation, 5.*LANDLORD AND TENANT—See Master and Servant, 26—

1. where a lease was made for five years with the privilege of five more no notice was necessary to continue the lease. .... 1216
2. during a ten-year lease where tenant agrees to keep in repair, usual wear and tear excepted, landlord not liable to pay for a new roof put on in place of old one, defective from natural decay. .... 1630
3. mistake in drafting lease may be corrected to conform to true agreement of parties ..... 1630
4. tenant by subletting grazing privilege of premises does not forfeit the lease. .... 1989
5. writ of forcible entry does not lie in such case. .... 1989
6. agent of landlord to collect rents not authorized to make a lease ..... 2341
7. authority to make a lease can not be proved by statement of agent. .... 2341
8. such statement is hearsay evidence. .... 2341
9. landlord not liable to tenant for alleged injuries to his wife in execution of writ of restitution of property ..... 2341

LIBEL—See Malicious Prosecution, 1, 2.*LIENS—See Attachment, 1; Husband and Wife, 16; Judicial Sales, 5; Personal Representative, 12; Sheriffs, 2—

1. statute providing for liens on real estate in favor of mechanics and material men is constitutional ..... 1216
2. purchaser of land under execution encumbered by a mortgage obtains only a lien subject to the mortgage ..... 1303
3. such purchaser not entitled to a writ of possession ..... 1303
4. lien of material man for heating apparatus furnished contractor properly asserted for full amount against real property of the owner ..... 1548
5. amount paid contractor can not be credited on claim of material man. .... 1548

LIENS—Continued.

	Page.
6. duty of owner of property to see that all material put in his house is paid for .....	1548
7. true basis of settlement of rents, interest and purchase money between joint purchasers of property .....	1732
8. lien on land to secure purchase-money notes executed by B. superior to mortgage executed by B. afterwards for borrowed money .....	2317
9. deed of record is notice to person accepting mortgage on same land .....	2317
10. a material man estopped from enforcement of lien for material furnished in construction of house where amount sufficient to satisfy his lien is paid to contractor by consent of material man ..	2387

LIMITATION, STATUTE OF—See Contracts, 7; Corporations, 12, 13; Damages, 18; Fraudulent Conveyances, 18; Municipal Government, 27, 28; Municipal Taxation, 12; Personal Representatives, 3, 4, 5; Process, 3; Railroads, 8, 27; Res Judicata, 2, 3; Street Improvements, 2, 4, 11; Taxation, 8, 9, 10, 11, 18—

1. five years did not bar action to set aside deed as fraudulent where creditor had no actual notice of fraudulent conveyance ....1564
2. recording of deed not conclusive evidence of notice to creditor....1564
3. claim for rents barred by statute of limitation . ....1913
4. possession of land by wife for more than fifteen years as devisee of her husband not disturbed .....
5. action for damages for injuries to stock in transportation against common carrier not barred until after five years .....
6. right to assess omitted property is barred by limitation after five years from time it should have been assessed. .... 2124, 2138
7. sale of wife's land by husband and possession held by purchaser for thirty years prevents recovery by wife. .... 2322
8. no disability will prevent running of the thirty-year statute ....2322
9. purchaser holds adversely to wife .....
10. she is not joint tenant with the purchaser .....
11. time within which a married woman is barred of her right to recover her land sold by husband .. ... 2427
12. probate of a will is barred ten years after death of testator .....2486

LUNATICS—

1. the city court of Louisville has jurisdiction to hold inquests of lunacy... ..2240
2. personal service of process on lunatic valid in particular case ... 2240
3. proper proceedings to authorize judicial sale of lunatic's land to pay debts .....

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION—See Elections, 33; Street Railways, 8; Taxation, 3, 4—

1. damages recovered of life insurance company by agent for malicious prosecution on charge of embezzlement under improper instructions .....
2. proper instruction as to advice of attorney constituting probable cause .....
3. instruction should inform jury what facts constitute probable cause .....
4. instruction should inform jury what constitutes embezzlement or fraudulent conversion .....
5. in such case malice in fact must be shown.....1561
6. both malice and a want of probable cause must exist to justify a recovery .....
7. appellee having been indicted in three paragraphs for criminal libel in charging an insurance company with fraudulent practices, after acquittal, in suit for malicious prosecution, appellant on proof that either paragraph is good would show probable cause.1902
8. libelous matter laid before the grand jury, but not made the basis of the indictment, incompetent .....
9. proof that appellant's agents deceived persons into taking policies by assuring them absolutely that there would be a level rate of premium, was competent.....1902
10. such evidence not incompetent as impeaching the terms of the written policy.....1903
11. rule forbidding impeachment of written contract by parol evidence only applies between the parties to it.....1903
12. court in its instructions should have defined probable cause and the offense of criminal libel.....1903

MANDAMUS —See Appeals, 17; Pleading, 26—	Page.
1. superintendent of asylum for insane may be compelled by mandamus to join president of board in certifying claim for premiums on insurance.....	1722
2. mandamus granted to compel city council to pass ordinance providing for reduction of boundary of city.....	1992
MARRIED WOMEN —See Husband and Wife, 15—a married woman estopped from recovery of money paid where a recovery by her was for a debt which she in honor and good conscience owed .....	2371
MASTER AND SERVANT —See Contracts, 8; Railroads, 5, 81—
1. servant needlessly exposing himself to danger can not recover damages from his master .....	1083
2. liability of master to servant injured from fall of an elevator.....	1268
3. duty of master to furnish elevator in reasonably safe condition ..	1268
4. implied duty of master to furnish servant a reasonably safe place to work .....	1283
5. master is liable for failure to do so although he may entrust this duty to others .....	1283
6. master can not delegate this duty to another and relieve himself from responsibility .....	1289
7. duty of master to furnish his servant tools that are reasonably safe.	1318
8. but master does not warrant such tools.....	1318
9. liability of master for surgical attention to servant injured in his employment. ....	1590
10. liability for injuries to servant from defective machinery.....	1627
11. how such liability affected by previous knowledge of defects by servant and promise of master to repair .....	1627
12. operation of machine for several weeks afterwards without accident incompetent evidence on question of negligence .....	1628
13. evidence that machine was repaired after the accident was incompetent.....	1628
14. liability of master for death of his servant caused by injuries received while working in a mine under direction of a boss .....	1703
15. instruction as to whether the boss was superior in authority to decedent properly given .....	1704
16. proper instruction as to duty of master to furnish safe place for his servant to work. ....	1704
17. duty of owner of mine as to preparation and inspection of mine...1704
18. when servant working in dangerous place guilty of contributory negligence.....	1704
19. liability of owners of coal mine for injuries to assistant to machinery man .....	1777
20. machinery man and his assistant are not fellow servants.....	1777
21. recovery of damages may be had without proving gross negligence.	1777
22. liability of master for injury to girl in mangle machine in laundry.	1900
23. duty of master to furnish safe machinery for use of his servant ...	1900
24. liability of express company to employe for injuries received from breaking of rotten plank in platform .....	1915
25. degree of diligence required of master in such case.....	1915
26. master can not escape liability because he leases premises instead of owns them .....	1916
27. liability of master for injuries to servant while lighting lamp.....	2095
28. duty of master in furnishing lamps for the use of his servant .....	2095
29. degree of care to be exercised by servant in using lamps.....	2095
30. when master liable for malicious acts of his servant .....	2214
31. liability of master for gross negligence of a foreman of distillery in causing a servant to be scalded .....	2236
32. only compensatory damages allowed in such case .....	2236
33. instruction permitting giving exemplary damages erroneous, but not prejudicial.....	2236
3. servant engaged as trapper in mine injured by his own negligence not entitled to recover damages of master .....	2437
MORTGAGES —See Attachment, 1; Dower, 2, 3; Fraudulent Conveyances, 10, 11, 21; Husband and Wife, 3; Infants, 11, 12; Judicial Sales, 5, 6, 7; Partnership, 3; Title, 7, 8, 9—
1. exception to commissioner's report on claim, secured by mortgage on personal property, on ground that seal of corporation, mortgagor, not attached properly overruled.....	1926

MORTGAGES—Continued.

Page.

- 2. exception to same because corporation never authorized execution or delivery of mortgage properly overruled ..... 1926
- 3. such objections should be pleaded..... 1926
- 4. seal of corporation not necessary to execution of chattel mortgage in this State ... .. 1926
- 5. sufficient description in mortgage of cattle ..... 2338

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT—See Mandamus, 2; Street Improvements, 1—

- 1. liability of city for damages resulting from permitting obstruction to remain in the street, resulting in injury to plaintiff ..... 1032
- 2. verdict for $2,500 damages not excessive in particular case ... .. 1092
- 3. city can not complain because a peremptory instruction was given to find for a codefendant ..... 1092
- 4. president of board of aldermen improperly assumed duties of mayor when mayor temporarily out of the city ..... 1469
- 5. meaning of statute in use of words "absence of mayor" ..... 1469
- 6. member of board of police and fire commission improperly appointed by president of board of aldermen and confirmed by the board in particular case ..... 1469
- 7. no confirmation of police and fire commissioner appointed by mayor to fill a vacancy required by law ..... 1469
- 8. liability of city for death of citizen by falling on a post in sidewalk ..... 1671
- 9. after three years city presumed to know location of post..... 1671
- 10. having means of knowledge and negligently remaining ignorant is equivalent to knowledge..... 1672
- 11. failure to allege that city knew of erection of posts in sidewalk cured after verdict..... 1672
- 12. failure to allege that injured man did not know of obstruction cured after verdict..... 1672
- 13. such objections are defensive and waived by not making them in lower court ..... 1672
- 14. a country road in territory annexed to a city becomes a street and city chargeable with keeping same free from obstructions ... .. 1671
- 15. formal recognition of it as a street by resolution of the council unnecessary..... 1671
- 16. where property is dedicated to a city for public purposes to the bank of a river, land acquired by accretion belongs to the city... 1692
- 17. city not estopped from claiming the land because grantor, his heirs and vendees paid taxes on same..... 1692
- 18. city not entitled to damages for retention of land by appellees.... 1692
- 19. city could not use or lease its public highways for agricultural purposes ..... 1692
- 20. damages are recoverable only where plaintiff has been injured by unlawful act of defendant ..... 1692
- 21. proving unlawful act of defendant alone does not entitle plaintiff to damages..... 1692
- 22. ordinance imposing penalty on owner of premises where liquor is sold is unconstitutional ..... 1739
- 23. city not liable to person injured by coaster on its streets..... 1804
- 24. preventing coasting by police officers is a public duty and a failure to perform same does not impose a liability on the city ..... 1804
- 25. congregation of coasters on a street does not constitute an obstruction on the street ..... 1804
- 26. liability of city for causing accumulation of surface water, thereby overflowing private property ..... 1336
- 27. each overflow within five years may be recovered for as a separate offense..... 1336
- 28. but defective sewers causing said overflows must have been constructed within fifteen years ..... 1336
- 29. a jury can not apportion damages in such case..... 1337
- 30. liability of city for injuries sustained by driver of patrol wagon from limb overhanging street..... 1375
- 31. duty of city to keep its streets free from obstructions ... .. 1375
- 32. issue of bonds by city not invalidated on account of alleged fraud in ascertaining census of city ..... 1978
- 33. former suit to reduce boundary of city did not embrace same boundary..... 1692

MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT—Continued.

	Page.
34. subsequent suit for different boundary not barred by former suit..	1992
35. change of city from third class to second class legislated out of office prosecuting attorney of city court and marshal .....	1998
36. but they hold their offices until after November election, 1903 .....	1998
37. provision of Constitution prohibiting change of compensation of officers during term considered with provision authorizing change of cities from one class to another .....	1998
38. claim of water company for water rent under contract with city not enforced.....	2198
39. water company only entitled to reasonable price for water furnished.....	2198
40. city not guilty of negligence in permitting manhole to remain open in particular case .....	2218
41. a city is not liable in damages or under indictment for permitting a nuisance on private property.....	2286
42. a city is not liable for the acts or omissions of its officers in the enforcement of penal laws. ....	2286
43. proposed annexation of territory to the town of Fredonia should have been adjudged. ....	2331
44. a city has the same duty to keep in repair a platform over a gutter erected by a citizen as if same was erected by the city .....	2434
45. city not liable for personal injury resulting from a hole in said platform existing for a short time .....	2434
46. city clerk properly refused to issue laundry license before the license held by applicant expired. ....	2442
47. clerk had no authority to issue a license for $10 after ordinance was in force fixing it at $25. ....	2442
48. liability of city for permitting an obstruction on a sidewalk.....	2448
49. ordinance providing proceedings for forfeiture of hogs found running at large valid.....	2479

MUNICIPAL TAXATION—

1. in action against husband and wife to enforce lien for municipal taxes against wife's land, after death of wife recovery may be had against husband's life interest without revivor .....	1357
2. tax bill made out and signed by the assessor is prima facie evidence that requirements of the law have complied with.....	1358
3. burden of proof then shifts to the defendant .....	1358
4. assessor may make duplicate tax bills .....	1358
5. lack of diligence for five years in prosecuting action for taxes does not bar a recovery .....	1358
6. interest on unpaid taxes in the nature of penalties are not unconstitutional .....	1358
7. law regulating taxation in first-class cities not local or special legislation.....	1358
8. sufficiency of description of lands in assessment for municipal taxation .....	1358
9. that corporation of commissioners of sinking fund has gone out of existence no defense in suit for taxes .....	1358
10. form in which levy made not material .....	1359
11. failure to appoint board of equalization no defense to suit for taxes .....	1359
12. action to recover taxes instituted against a woman who held the life estate in land not barred against her heirs where revivor immediately had.....	1359
13. cause of action did not accrue against them until after death of their mother .....	1359
14. selling certain lots to satisfy entire claim for taxes more beneficial to owner than to sell parts of each lot .....	1359
15. sale of lots for taxation only an apparent though no real hardship.....	1359
16. finding of fact by chancellor as to the location of grain elevator within the limits of the city for purposes of taxation not disturbed.....	1477
17. two-thirds of those voting in favor of issuing bonds in aid of building schoolhouses in second class cities was sufficient.....	1510
18. a city of the second class has authority by statute to purchase property for purpose of a public park and issue bonds therefor .....	1568
19. purchase of park is within the scope of powers of city for the public welfare .....	1568

MUNICIPAL TAXATION—Continued.		Page.
20.	acts authorizing assessors of first, second and third class cities to assess franchises of certain corporations not repealed by revenue act of 1902.	1574
21.	rules as to implied repeals.	1574
22.	separate acts should be construed together as a consistent whole if possible.	1574
23.	city of Owensboro had authority under general revenue law to levy a tax on franchise of water company for 1898 prior to the passage of city charter.	2530
24.	but 10 per cent. penalty for nonpayment not authorized.	2530
25.	only interest on such taxes recoverable.	2530
26.	board of valuation properly assessed the value of property of corporation at its fair cash value at a voluntary sale.	2530
27.	law as to valuation at 70 per cent. of its cash value repealed by Constitution.	2530
28.	sale of waterworks for city taxes by collector enjoined.	2530
NEGLIGENCE—See Common Carriers, 5, 6, 7, 9, 17; Damages, 29, 30, 32, 33, 34; Evidence, 20; Instructions, 3, 6, 7, 8, Master and Servant, 4, 5, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 19, 20, 21, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 31; Municipal Government, 8, 9, 10, 14, 23, 24, 25, 30, 31, 42; Pleading, 3, Railroads, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 22, 23, 24, 25, 33, 36, 37, 38, 40, 43, 47, 48, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 71, 72, 73, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86; Street Railways, 1, 2, 3, 4, 6, 7, 12.; Telegraph Companies, 6, 7; Tarpopes, 2, 3.
1.	in action for injuries from negligence by which roustabout injured on a steamboat, record kept by shipping clerk incompetent to show that plaintiff was not among the roustabouts.	1262
2.	such books incompetent to prove a negative.	1263
3.	child not guilty of contributory negligence in particular case.	1265
4.	duty of railroad company to a track walker.	1415
5.	track walker is not chargeable with negligence of those in charge of a train.	1415
6.	failure to inspect is prima facie evidence of negligence.	1415
7.	liability of electric light company for damages for personal injuries resulting from failure to properly insulate wires.	1443
8.	a small boy not guilty of contributory negligence in such case.	1443
9.	measure of damages in such case.	1443
10.	gross negligence in management of hand car causing death of section hand.	1610
11.	street railway not liable in particular case for killing child.	1906
12.	degree of care required to be exercised by street railway companies to prevent injuries.	1906
13.	no recovery allowed for death of boy nineteen years of age injured while attempting to board a car.	1967
14.	he contributed to his injury.	1967
15.	verdict against steamboat company for damages to person for negligence in landing flagrantly against the evidence.	2081
16.	proper instruction as to degree of care required of brakeman to avoid injury.	2153
17.	insufficient proof of negligence of railroad company.	2153
18.	master not liable for injuries to child from being run over by driver without his fault.	2267
19.	liability of sheriff for taking insufficient surety on bond to release attachment.	2290
NEW TRIAL—
1.	new trial of action to quiet title granted to defendant on petition.	1143
2.	that a juror had expressed an opinion as to the guilt of the accused before his selection not subject to exception.	1144
3.	petition for a new trial should be filed within three years.	1263
4.	defense that no interest is recoverable where no demand of personal representative made within one year not available in petition for new trial filed more than three years after judgment.	1280
5.	new trial granted on account of unavoidable abuse of counsel.	1433
6.	Commonwealth has right to make a motion for a new trial after judgment of not guilty under an indictment.	1658
7.	judgment does not become final until after motion for new trial overruled.	1658
8.	refusing new trial on ground of newly-discovered evidence not reviewable by Court of Appeals.	1731

NEW TRIAL—Continued.

Page.

9. petition for new trial of action confirming settlements of trustee too indefinite in averments as to exceptions to said settlement....1894
10. no reversal can be had for overruling motion for new trial on ground of newly-discovered evidence.....1974
11. this court is less disposed to reverse lower court for granting than for refusing a new trial.....2365
12. drunkenness of attorney during part of trial, presented for the first time in motion for new trial, not considered on appeal .....2511

NOTARIES—

1. a notary public has no right to agree to accept less fees for his services than allowed by law.....1299
2. but he may make a contract for a lumping sum for his services as clerk, including notarial duties.....1299
3. estoppel after remaining in employment for a long time to sue for services at greater price than received.....1299
4. president of a bank has no authority to contract for fees of a notary public.....1299
5. such duty devolves on the board of directors.....1299

NOTICE—Fraudulent Conveyances, 18, 19; Guaranty; Partnership, 9.NUISANCE—See Contracts, 10; Evidence, 32; Injunction, 1, 2, 3.OFFICE AND OFFICER—See Construction of Statutes, 52, 53, 54, 62, 67; Damages, 14, 15, 16; Municipal Government, 85, 36, 37, 41, 42, 43—

1. board of education of second class city can not add compensation to treasurer of city who is ex-officio treasurer of board of education during his term of office.....1478
2. he holds but one office.....1478
3. his salary had been fixed before his election.....1478
4. improper instruction on trial of jailer for misfeasance in office by permitting prisoner to go at large.....2180
5. county judge had no authority to permit a prisoner to go at large 2180
6. sheriff appointed to fill an unexpired term, not entitled to hold over during the succeeding term where the election is held to be void.....2498

OFFSET—See Partnership, 7.OVERRULED CASES—

1. McGlasson v. McGlasson's Ex'or, &c., 21 Ky. Law Rep., 1843.....1474
2. Oder v. Commonwealth, 88 Ky., 32.....1742
3. D. & N. R. R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 1 Bush, 250.....2138
4. McAllister's Ex'or v. Commonwealth, 6 Bush, 581.....2138
5. Franklin County Court v. L. & N. R. R. Co., 84 Ky., 64.....2138
6. Baldwin v. Shine, Presiding Judge, &c., 84 Ky., 512.....2138
7. L. & N. R. R. Co. v. Commonwealth, 85 Ky., 210.....2138
8. Louisville and Jeffersonville Ferry Co. v. Commonwealth....1339, 2138

PARENT AND CHILD—

1. chancellor properly gave the custody of an eight-year-old girl to her father in particular case.....1359
2. Court of Appeals is indisposed to interfere with decision of the chancellor concerning custody of children.....1352

PARTIES TO ACTIONS—See Common Carrier, 13; Corporations, 8; Fraudulent Conveyances, 15; Gaming, 1, 2, 3; Infants, 5, 6; Pleading, 10—

1. an interest in land can not be subjected to a debt in a proceeding where its owner was not required to make a defense.....1200
2. a wife who has joined her husband in the execution of a mortgage on his land is not a necessary party to an action to enforce the mortgage lien.....2104
3. purchaser at a judicial sale in such case not compelled to look to the application of the purchase money.....2104
4. an informer can not recover of a committee of a lunatic money collected by him on a supersedeas bond where notes which were foundation of judgment superseded were executed for gaming consideration.....2104
5. such recovery can be had against the winner only.....2120
6. stay of proceedings on judgment sufficient consideration to bind surety on supersedeas bond.....2120
7. particular taxpayer not entitled to maintain action to enjoin collection of a tax.....2336
8. a member of a class must be a fair representative of that class to be authorized to maintain an action for all.....2336

PARTNERSHIP—See Fraudulent Conveyances, 6, 7; Gaming, 1; Husband and Wife, 15—

PARTNERSHIP—

- |   |      |
|---|------|
| 1. facts show partnership to buy bonds on speculation...  | 1820 |
| 2. although a partner fails to furnish his share of money in the partnership he may recover his share of profits .....  | 1820 |
| 3. separate mortgages executed by partners on their undivided interests are inferior to a mortgage executed by them as partners on partnership property .....   | 1668 |
| 4. report of commissioner settling accounts between parties and fixing amount of lien properly approved .....   | 1699 |
| 5. proof of partnership sufficiently proven in particular case .....  | 1829 |
| 6. partnership established although partner failed to furnish amount of money agreed .....  | 1829 |
| 7. partner when sued on a note may offset profits that he is entitled to on a settlement of accounts .....  | 1829 |
| 8. partner not estopped to assert claim for profits where he has frequently demanded settlement of partner .....  | 1829 |
| 9. assignee of partner affected by notice of demand for settlement ..   | 1829 |
| 10. subscribing to an enterprise to defray expense and buy a railroad by stockholders constituted them partners and entitled holders of nine shares of stock in a corporation to their proportion of the benefits from the purchase ..... | 1889 |
| 11. their brother had no authority to deprive them of their share of the profits .....  | 1889 |
| 12. adjustment of partnership accounts approved .....   | 1918 |
| 13. failure of proof to show satisfaction of claim against partnership by acceptance of note of one partner .....   | 2049 |
| 14. erroneous instruction in such case not prejudicial .....  | 2049 |
| 15. book of expirations of insurance policies not an asset of partnership subject to separate sale .....  | 2465 |
| 16. the business agency as a whole could be sold .....  | 2465 |

PASSWAY—

- |  |      |
|--|------|
| 1. passway over land used for fifty years a grant presumed .....   | 2034 |
| 2. owner of land prohibited from obstructing such passway .....  | 2034 |
| 3. in proceedings for condemnation of passway evidence tending to show that proposed passway was most practicable and feasible route was incompetent ..... | 2398 |
| 4. finding of jury that no fencing was necessary not flagrantly against the evidence .....   | 1898 |
| 5. instructions not erroneous because they failed to state how much land the passway should contain .....  | 2398 |
| 6. costs in circuit court properly adjudged against appellant where the recovery is less than in the county court .....                                    | 2398 |

PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES—See Assignment for Benefit of Creditors, 10; Attorneys, 12; Wills, 10, 11—

- |  |      |
|--|------|
| 1. personal representative on account of extra services entitled to more than 5 per cent. commission on amount distributed .....                       | 1281 |
| 2. failure of personal representative to keep account of his acts deprives him of right to any compensation .....                                      | 1396 |
| 3. personal representative is liable for failure to collect a debt where he permits the statute of limitation to bar same .....                        | 1397 |
| 4. personal representative estopped by his negligence from pleading lapse of time and statute of limitation as defense to action by distributees ..... | 1397 |
| 5. such estoppel binds his heirs also .....  | 1397 |
| 6. no necessity for appointment of personal representative where there is no personal property of decedent or debts to be paid .....                   | 1614 |
| 7. taxes on land before they are due is not a debt against the decedent's estate .....   | 1614 |
| 8. no necessity of appointment of personal representative in particular case .....   | 1660 |
| 9. allowance of fees for attorneys in such case improper .....   | 1660 |
| 10. general rule as to when necessity for appointment of personal representatives exists .....   | 1660 |
| 11. question as to which of two personal representatives is entitled to extra compensation allowed should be settled in lower court ....               | 1783 |
| 12. an executor holding real estate for benefit of his children has no authority to borrow money and create a lien on same .....                       | 1945 |
| 13. executors vested with full authority to sell and convey land .....   | 2115 |

PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES—Continued.		Page.
14.	$500 properly allowed an administrator for extra services .....	2395
15.	allowance of $1,400 for attorney's fee for services rendered administrator without hearing proof as to their value was erroneous...	2395
16.	administrator who purchased land with funds belonging to his intestate violates his trust. ....	2424
17.	heir may recover land so purchased .....	2424
18.	executor has the right to employ attorney to represent the estate in a will contest at expense of the estate although devisees employ one at their own expense .....	2439
19.	$500 allowed attorney for executor is reasonable .....	2439
20.	improper order to require solvent executor to pay into court money in his hands before finishing administration .....	2439
21.	chancellor will not permit an executor who is in contempt to withdraw money from court. ....	2439
22.	he may renew his application after purging himself of contempt. ....	2439
PLEADING—See Bonds, 1, 2; Common Carriers, 6, 7; Contracts, 28; Damages, 37; Elections, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 11, 12, 29, 30; Homestead, 18; Judgment, 6; Jurisdiction, 2, 5; Mortgages, 1, 2, 3; Municipal Government, 11, 12, 13; Railroads, 27, 44; Sheriff, 6; Slander, 2; Street Railways, 8; Taxation, 13, 14, 23, 24; Title, 21—
1.	claim against a decedent's estate should be set up by pleadings ...	1146
2.	but such claims will not be disallowed if proven with the commissioner. ....	1146
3.	where no reply filed to answer setting up contributory negligence a peremptory instruction for defendant properly given. ....	1318
4.	where demurrers presented to pleadings in consolidated actions are disposed of parties can not complain of failure to dispose of same objections in the separate actions ..	1359
5.	failure to have lower court pass on plea before trial, which is in effect a special demurrer, will be considered a waiver of it. ....	1398
6.	special damages not naturally anticipated from the injury should be pleaded with particularity. ....	1403
7.	insufficient petition to recover damages for location of smallpox pesthouse in violation of law .....	1484
8.	insufficient plea of son assault demesne .....	1514
9.	dismissal of petition asserting claim by attachment did not prevent a defendant asserting lien by answer and cross petition from prosecuting same .....	1565
10.	parties who have executed refunding bonds to pay a debt in litigation are parties to the action and entitled to present defense to debt where original parties fraudulently collude to establish the debt. ....	1587
11.	a continuance on ground of surprise should be granted to afford opportunity to make defense .....	1587
12.	amendment of pleading of plaintiff as to loss of time from injury, also of defendant as to improper treatment of injury, should be permitted .....	1623
13.	not error in particular case to refuse to permit defendant to file during the trial an amended answer setting up fact as to residence of deceased. ....	1687
14.	such fact could have been discovered before trial. ....	1687
15.	amended petition set up separate cause of action from petition ..	1735
16.	judgment without service of process on amended petition void. ....	1735
17.	amended petition to contract the homestead right is a different cause of action from a petition for division of land. ....	1735
18.	plea of non est factum and no consideration not inconsistent defenses to a note .....	1799
19.	objection to prosecution of claim for profits by cross petition waived by failure to raise objection in lower court. ....	1829
20.	an answer which denies facts alleged in a group is defective. ....	1832
21.	defective petition in action to enforce lien on property for lumber furnished in construction of house. ....	1969
22.	defective allegations of petition not cured by filing exhibit. ....	1969
23.	defective petition alleging negligence cured by answer. ....	2008
24.	defective petition to set aside fraudulent conveyance cured by answer. ....	2012
25.	failure of petition to allege adverse holding of passway waived by failure to demur. ....	2035

PLEADING—Continued.	Page.
26. sufficiency of petition for mandamus against governing authority of a political party.....	2135
27. insufficiency of petition to authorize a personal judgment in particular case.....	2182
28. insufficient allegation of petition as to heirship of plaintiff and as to rights of alleged ancestor in property.....	2225
29. a defective answer alleging that a payment was intended as an redemption of a legacy cured by verdict.....	2253
30. while demurrer to petition is pending error to render judgment for plaintiff.....	2268
31. in suit against surety on a bond against fraud and dishonesty of a broker amended petition charging fraud and dishonesty no departure from original cause of action.....	2308
32. defective allegations of petition to enjoin collection of tax for county purposes.....	2336
33. sufficiency of petition in action to recover possession of land ..	2362
34. defective petition for specific performance of contract in sale of land.....	2377
35. defendant by answering waived objection to misjoinder of actions	2409
36. an exhibit will not supply omission of material fact in a pleading.	2416
37. sufficiency of petition to enforce lien for street improvement ..	2478
38. an amended answer may be filed any time without leave before reply.....	2488
POSSESSION—See Title, 1, 19.
PRACTICE—See Street Improvements, 3—
1. time for making motion to set aside judgment in court of continuous session.....	1149
2. not error in particular case for court to urge the jury to hasten a verdict.....	1222
3. tax bills filed as exhibits in pleadings, but not marked "filed" by the clerk, is part of the record ..	1858
4. court has no right to refuse motion of plaintiff to dismiss action without prejudice.....	1456
PROCESS—See Common Carrier, 15, 16—
1. an agent of defendant attending court as a witness not exempt from service of process.....	2471
2. filing answer to merits of action treated as appearance on appeal and on return of case to lower court.....	2471
3. where petition filed in time failure of clerk to issue summons until after statute of limitation would bar same, plaintiff not prejudiced thereby.....	2488
4. failure of clerk by mistake to issue process in time in particular case does not bar action.....	2488
5. a nonresident coming into the State for the purpose of attending to litigation not exempt from service of process in another action.	2533
6. a nonresident heir properly served with process in action on liability of her ancestor ..	2533
PROHIBITION, WRIT OF—
1. writ of prohibition will not be issued to prevent rendition of a personal judgment in particular case.....	1542
2. writ properly denied to prevent proceeding with suit on alleged ground of want of service of process.....	2533
RAILROADS—See Common Carriers, 2, 3; Contracts, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 31, 32, 33, 34; Criminal Law, 52; Damages, 11, 32, 33; Evidence, 19, 20; Negligence, 14, 17, 18; Taxation, 26—
1. where yardmaster guilty of contributory negligence in coupling cars resulting in his death, no recovery can be had ..	1083
2. railroad company not liable for placing a torpedo on the track under proper precautions, resulting in an injury to a child.....	1125
3. child guilty of contributory negligence in particular case.....	1125
4. liability of railroad company for injury to section hand from splinter on spike maul ..	1160
5. liability of master for furnishing unsafe tools to his servants.....	1160
6. liability of railroad company to passenger for injuries received from car door slamming and mashing her hand and wrist ..	1170
7. railroad liable in damages for operating double track near property where municipal authority only authorized construction of single track.....	1233

RAILROADS—Continued.	Page.
8. five years' limitation does not bar such action.....	1234
9. measure of damages in such case .. .. .	1234
10. suit by switchman for injuries from switching cars not barred by receipt alleged to have been given for loss of time for certain period after injury and drug bill.....	1244
11. jury should have been instructed to consider whether receipt was given in full settlement of all demands or only for designated items .. .. .	1244
12. rule as to tender of money before disregarding compromise....	1244
13. where rejected depositions are agreed to be read as statement of absent witnesses error to exclude certain parts thereof as evidence.	1273
14. evidence showing experience of stockmen who have valued horses in action for damages for injuries in carrying same improperly excluded.....	1273
15. railroad company not liable for injuries to section hand for breaking of lever on hand car in particular case .. .. .	1318
16. railroad company not liable for death of trespasser riding tricycle on its track .. .. .	1347
17. duty of railroad company to trespassers on its track .. .. .	1347
18. testimony to show that superintendent of section told deceased he did not care if he used his tricycle not competent. ....	1347
19. evidence that company had permitted its track to be used by the public at the point where the injury occurred was incompetent ..	1347
20. no recovery allowed for death of switchman caused by his contributory negligence.....	1378
21. liability of railroad company for injuries to passenger at depot from lump of coal thrown from passing train .. .. .	1402
22. liability of railroad company for injuries to track walker by rocks thrown from roadbed by passing train with dragging rod .. ..	1415
23. $3,000 damages in such case not excessive .. .. .	1415
24. liability to passenger injured by sudden jerk of train while getting on same.....	1447
25. verdict for $500 damages not excessive .. .. .	1447
26. failure to bring action for personal injuries against railroad company for more than one year is no bar where delay resulted from promises made by company.....	1449
27. plea avoiding the statute of limitation was valid as an estoppel and was properly presented in the reply .. .. .	1449
28. railroad company not liable for injuries to section hands on hand car when not engaged in their duties .. .. .	1459
29. peremptory instruction should have been given for defendant in such case.....	1459
30. liability of railroad company to brakeman for injuries sustained by defective coupler.....	1499
31. duty of railroad company to provide and keep machinery and appliances in order for its employees' use .. .. .	1499
32. peremptory instruction improperly given in particular case .. ..	1499
33. liability of railroad company for injuries causing death of fireman by detached cars striking engine.....	1536
34. $10,000 damages not excessive .. .. .	1536
35. defendant not entitled to peremptory instruction in particular case.	1536
36. instruction as to punitive damages properly given in such case ..	1536
37. liability to party permanently injured while loading stock by collision with car .. .. .	1566
38. degree of care required of railroad company in such case .. .. .	1566
39. proper measure of damages in such case .. .. .	1566
40. it is necessary that the railroad commission should recommend an indictment of a railroad company before an indictment for a violation of the statute known as the long and short haul statute can be found .. .. .	1593
41. former decision of Court of Appeals in case of I. C. R. R. Co. v. Commonwealth binding on Court of Appeals in case of long and short hauls.....	1594
42. statute relating to long and short hauls applies to past acts, and the Constitution on same subject relates to future acts .. .. .	1594
43. liability of railroad company for injuries to passenger jerked from train while alighting therefrom .. .. .	1623
44. no instruction should be given authorizing damages for loss of time caused by injuries where such loss not pleaded .. .. .	1623

RAILROADS—Continued.

	Page.
45. improper instruction as to measure of damages in such case.....	1623
46. proper instruction as to permanent injury to plaintiff, an old man, by reduction of his power to earn money .....	1623
47. no recovery for damage resulting from improper treatment of in- jury where same not pleaded.....	1623
48. liability of railroad company for injuries to motorman on electric car in case of collision at a crossing .....	1637
49. degree of care required of persons in charge of train in approach- ing crossings .....	1637
50. contention that permanency of injury was caused by plaintiff get- ting out and walking too soon not maintainable unless pleaded..	1637
51. liability for death of section hand killed by hand car .....	1666
52. degree of care required of railroad company and persons to prevent injuries at crossings .....	1687
53. liability of a railroad company for loss of property burned by sparks escaping from engine .....	1708
54. evidence as to engines about the time of the injury emitting sparks and cinders and causing other fires was competent .....	1708
55. no liability on railroad company for killing a trespasser asleep on the track .....	1754
56. contributory negligence of trespasser prevents recovery for his death .....	1754
57. duty of railroad companies to trespassers on track .....	1754
58. meaning of "exoneration" of excessive freight charges .....	1779
59. boy seven years of age injured by climbing on train denied recov- ery of damages by his contributory negligence .....	1796
60. railroad company not liable for death of trespasser on its track near a private crossing in particular case.....	1808
61. liability of railroad company for injury to brakeman thrown from top of car by sudden jerking of train .....	1819
62. company in such case guilty of gross negligence .....	1819
63. liability of railroad company to employe of shipper injured by un- safe condition of door in depot.....	1821
64. duty of company to keep depot premises in reasonably safe con- dition .....	1822
65. $1,000 damages in such case not excessive .....	1822
66. railroad company not liable for death caused by collision of train with tricycle on which deceased was riding .....	1879
67. duty of railroad company to such trespasser .....	1879
68. railroad company not liable for removing cattle guards at private crossing in particular case .....	1896
69. nor is it liable for removing wing fences between his property line and the property adjoining .....	1896
70. no prescriptive right acquired in cattle guards or wing fences by any length of time .....	1896
71. person injured by horse becoming frightened and running away at sight of hand car at a crossing which was operated in the proper manner can not recover damages .....	1906
72. liability for negligence in causing death of employe by running a truck over him.....	1942
73. railroad company not liable to passenger for damages for thumb mashed by door caused by his fault.....	1973
74. liability of railroads under contract to make up deficiency of divi- dends due stockholders of bridge company .....	2059
75. termination of contract as to particular railroad company.....	2059
76. sufficiency of notice to the public of obstruction of passway along railroad previously used by permission .....	2127
77. in particular case railroad company not liable to party injured by obstruction to passway along its track. ....	2127
78. liability of railroad company to traveler on turnpike for injuries from horse frightened by train crossing .....	2160
79. degree of care required of railroad company in such case .....	2160
80. traveler jumping from vehicle in such case not guilty of contribu- tory negligence .....	2161
81. railroad company liable in damages for injuries to boy for ma- licious act of trainman in putting him off the train if it was done in the line of his employment and while acting within the scope of his authority.....	2214

RAILROADS—Continued.

Page.

- 82. railroad company not liable for injuries to old woman by falling, who left her seat in disobedience to caution of conductor. .... 2382
- 83. liability of railroad company for death of brakeman caused by freight car being kicked down against him ..... 2315
- 84. liability for injury to workman resulting from order of foreman. 2339
- 85. railroad company not liable for damages to switchman injured by foreman placing torpedo on track as a prank..... 2344
- 86. trespasser in yards of railroad company precluded by his contributory negligence from recovery for injuries ..... 2350
- 87. liability of railroad company for injuries to adjoining land owner by discharge of surface water on his property ..... 2375
- 88. grant of right of way for construction of railroad does not give immunity from damages caused by accumulation of surface water... .. 2375
- 89. liability of railroad company for damages from fire caused by sparks escaping from engines ..... 2392
- 90. competent evidence in such case ... .. 2392
- 91. liability of railroad company for injuries to employe from being struck with a portable chute of a coal bin..... 2488
- 92. company only required to exercise reasonable care in placing its coal chutes so as not to injure person on ladder on side of car.... 2488
- 93. degree of care required of employe to discover the dangerous position of the chute..... 2488
- 94. compensatory damages only recoverable unless death ensues..... 2488
- 95. proper measure of compensatory damages recoverable in such case. 2488
- 96. verdict flagrantly against the evidence..... 2488

RAILROAD COMMISSION—See Railroads, 40.*RECEIVERS—

- 1. allowance to receiver appointed to take charge of property is largely within the discretion of the chancellor. .... 1154
- 2. Court of Appeals will interfere with such allowances only where chancellor abuses his discretion ..... 1154
- 3. in particular case allowance of $15,000 to receiver reduced to $10,000. 1154
- 4. statute regulating fees of commissioners and receivers does not apply in such cases. .... 1154
- 5. receiver properly appointed on application of part of joint owners against other joint owners to prevent cutting timber. .... 1783

REMOVAL OF ACTIONS—See Jurisdiction, 4; Taxation, 19, 20, 21—

- 1. dismissal of action for damages brought in Federal court does not bar a second suit for damages in State court ..... 1687
- 2. rule barring second suit applies only where former action was originally brought in State court and afterwards removed to Federal court and dismissed. .... 1687

RENTS—See Estoppel, 2; Executions, 2; Limitation, Statute of, 3.*RES JUDICATA—See Appeals, 6, 9; Dower, 4; Municipal Government, 33, 34; Taxation, 6—

- 1. a judgment of a sister State fixing liability of stockholders on subscriptions is binding on all stockholders alike, whether parties to the proceeding or not ..... 1157
- 2. but it does not conclude any stockholder who may be released by the lapse of time ..... 1157
- 3. statute of limitation may be pleaded in this State in action against stockholder..... 1157
- 4. rule that the law as declared on a first appeal controls the case—how limited..... 1225
- 5. judgment enjoining collection of municipal taxes for one year does not prohibit recovery of taxes for subsequent years ..... 1358
- 6. a junior mortgagee who was made a defendant to suit of the senior mortgagee, having failed to make defense can not afterwards enjoin judgment on ground that the prior lien should be credited by a certain sum..... 1386
- 7. such defense should have been made in former suit ..... 1386
- 8. a suit brought against a personal representative alone can not be pleaded in bar of an action brought to settle the estate of a decedent ..... 1397
- 9. plea of former suit pending waived by failure to have lower court pass on it..... 1397
- 10. actions prematurely brought can not be pleaded in bar of subsequent actions properly brought ..... 1524

RES JUDICATA—Continued.

Page.

11. on second appeal court will not review instructions given on first trial.....1670
12. all questions on former appeal in the record are construed as res judicata. .... 2240

RESCISSION OF CONTRACTS—See Conveyances, 2, 4, 6.*REVIVOR—

1. no necessity of revivor against heir who has sold his interest.....1423
2. no revivor against a personal representative permitted after a year from qualification of personal representative without consent ....1573

SCHOOLS—

1. taxes raised under special act for benefit of a district school for whites must be distributed pro rata between white and colored schools under general law.. ....1421
2. a majority of district trustees can not elect a teacher at a meeting of which the third trustee has no notice and is not present.....1431
3. reasonable effort must be made to notify trustees .....1431
4. tax to repair and furnish schoolhouse enjoined on account of joint interest owned by third parties in the building ....2027
5. statute authorizing such taxes contemplates that absolute title and control of property should be for benefit of the school..... 2027
6. amended answer setting up defect of title should have been permitted to be filed .. .... 2027
7. unauthorized act of county superintendent in abolishing a school district .. .... 2109
8. superintendent can not exercise arbitrary and unlimited power in reference to abolition of districts. .... 2109

SHERIFF—See False Imprisonment, 3, 4, 5, 6—

1. surety on official bond of sheriff not liable for county taxes collected in excess of constitutional limit. .... 1297
2. county has same lien as the State for taxes against property of sheriffs, including their homesteads .. .... 2196
3. a surety of a sheriff who pays the indebtedness of the sheriff is entitled to be subrogated to that lien. ....2196
4. order imposing general levy for county purposes sufficient. ....2196
5. sheriff not liable for negligence in taking insufficient surety on bond to release attachment if he exercises ordinary diligence to ascertain their solvency .. .... 2296
6. petition in such case defective for failure to allege that attachment was sustained..... 2296
7. copy of order sustaining attachment not filed in lower court not permitted to be filed in Court of Appeals.....2296

SLANDER—

1. language spoken which tends to injure the reputation of a miller for honesty and fairness is actionable per se. .... 1906
2. two separate slanders may be sued for in the same petition in separate paragraphs .. ....1906

STATUTES, CONSTRUCTION OF—See Street Improvements, 31.*General Statutes—

1. chapter 27, article 3, section 11, relating to allowance of claims by fiscal court..... 1368
2. page 242, relating to charitable bequests .. ....1249

Kentucky Statutes—

3. section 21, relating to assignment for benefit of creditors .....1308
4. section 68, relating to liability of owner of dog to person bitten by it. ....1920
5. section 93, relating to release of assignees for benefit of creditors..1785
6. section 133, relating to compensation of county attorney .. ....1802
7. section 224, requiring commissioners of asylums to keep buildings insured..... 1723
8. section 230, prescribing duties of steward of asylums.....1723
9. section 771, relating to rights of stockholders in corporations.....1889
10. sections 791 and 793, providing penalty against railroad companies for operating its road under a lease without recording same.....1880
11. section 820, the long and short haul statute .. .... 1593, 1883
12. section 841, providing for corporations of other States becoming corporations of this State..... 1125
13. section 1110, relating to change of venue..... 1814
14. section 1166, providing penalty for malicious cutting and wounding..... 1114

STATUTES, CONSTRUCTION OF—Continued—

Page.

15. section 1242, providing penalty for unlawful shooting and wounding..... 1801, 1540, 1720
16. section 1339, imposing penalty on officers for neglect of duty .... 2180
17. section 1341a, providing punishment for unlawfully conspiring together to injure others .. . . . 1723
18. section 1403, relating to share of widow in personalty of deceased husband, repealed by act of March 15, 1894. .... 2421
19. sections 1470 and 1484, prescribing duties of officers of primary elections. .... 1514
20. section 1681, relating to levies under execution. .... 1521
21. section 1689, relating to purchaser of land under execution obtaining writ of possession .. . . . 1303
22. section 1709, relating to levies under execution. .... 1521
23. section 1740, relating to fees of commissioners. .... 2186
24. section 1793, relating to cattle guards at private crossings .... 1893
25. section 1833, relating to calling meetings of fiscal courts. .... 1883
26. section 1907, relating to fraudulent conveyances. .... 1276
27. section 1907a, providing for action to set aside fraudulent conveyances. .... 1900
28. sections 1956 and 1958, relating to recovery of money paid a winner at gaming. .... 2120
29. section 1969, permitting action against party for inviting or persuading another to engage in gaming and lose money .... 1680
30. section 2015, relating to jurisdiction for appointment of guardians. 2409
31. section 2022, relating to appointment of guardians. .... 1968
32. section 2065, providing for payment of interest on legacies. .... 1123
33. section 2068, relating to ademption of legacies .... 1790
34. section 2135, relating to release of dower by wife. .... 2104
35. section 2226, relating to duty of jailer. .... 2180
36. section 2267, relating to panel of jury on trials. .... 2520
37. section 2353, concerning resulting trusts .. . . . 2016, 2425
38. section 2361, relating to actions for trespass and injury to lands. 2189
39. section 2463, providing lien for materialmen and mechanics. 1216, 1547
40. section 2486, providing statute of limitation applicable to probate of wills .. . . . 2486
41. section 2506, relating to statute of limitation as affecting married women .. . . . 2427
42. section 2515, providing limitation to actions for injuries to stock by railroads. .... 1052, 2124, 2188
43. section 2516, relating to actions for breach of contract .... 2052
44. section 2523, relating to assessment of property for taxation. .... 2124
45. section 2524, providing a limitation for actions for damages .... 2488
46. sections 2761 and 2776, relating to evidence to sustain tax claims .. 1858
47. sections 2826, 2829 and 2830, relating to powers of board of public works. .... 2227
48. section 2833, relating to improvements of streets in first class cities. 1198
49. section 2834, authorizing courts to correct assessment of property for street improvements. .... 2228
50. section 2985, relating to sufficiency of assessment. .... 1358
51. section 3038, creating cities of second class. .... 1568
52. section 3058, subsection 16, authorizing cities of second class to purchase property for public park. .... 1568
53. section 3064, providing for fixing salaries of officers of second class cities .. . . . 1478
54. section 3137, providing for appointment of police and fire commissioners by mayor of second class cities .. . . . 1469
55. section 3204, relating to discharge of duties of mayor by president of board of aldermen of second class cities during the absence or disability of the mayor .. . . . 1469
56. section 3314, relating to compensation of city attorneys .. . . . 1529
57. section 3567, authorizing recovery on apportionment warrants for street improvements .. . . . 1524
58. section 3748, imposing penalty on jailer for neglect of duty .... 2180
59. section 3833, fixing compensation of personal representatives .... 1281
60. section 3884, relating to interest on claims against decedent's estates .. . . . 1239
61. section 3909, relating to location of pest houses. .... 1484
62. section 4021, relating to recovery of taxes .. . . . 1839, 2124, 2138
63. section 410 , relating to distribution of taxes levied for school purposes .. . . . 1421

STATUTES, CONSTRUCTION OF—Continued—

Page.

63. section 4180, relating to liens on sheriff's property.....	2196
64. section 4241, relating to assessment of property by information of auditor's agent.....	1197
65. section 4274, relative to assessment of property as to 70 per cent. of its cash value, repealed.....	2530
66. sections 4427 and 4433, relating to changing school districts.....	2119
67. section 4433, relating to repeal of local or special laws.....	1421
68. section 4437, concerning title to property used for common school purposes.....	2027
69. section 4643, relating to stenographer's report of evidence.....	1817
70. sections 4659-4664, relating to release of sureties on guardian's bonds.....	1889
71. section 4843, relating to failure of devises to take effect.....	2310
72. sections 4849, 4850 and 859, relating to probate of wills.....	2218
73. section 5556, authorizing execution of official bond by sheriffs....	1297
74. act of June 23, 1894, relating to taxation of notes and mortgages held by building and loan associations.....	1223
75. act of 1898, relating to assessment of franchises by assessors in first and second class cities.....	1574
76. act of 1900, relating to assessment of franchises by assessor in third class cities.....	1574
77. act of 1902, relating to revenue and taxation.....	1574
78. resolution authorizing suit against the State and claim not unconstitutional.....	1747
79. interest properly allowed on such claim.....	1747
80. section 12, chapter 5, acts of extra session 1900, authorizing elections to be declared void for fraud and intimidation.....	1759
81. act of March 21, 1902, providing penalty for fraudulently disposing of property of another is constitutional.....	2352
82. in case of doubt courts incline to construe an act as constitutional.....	2352
83. Revised Statutes of United States, prohibiting person in employment of United States from receiving fees as attorney in prosecuting claim against the government.....	1778
84. Statute 43 Elizabeth.....	1249

STREET IMPROVEMENTS—See Damages, 13—

1. liability of city for rejecting bid for street improvements and accepting one requiring a greater price for the work.....	1087
2. property holders may recover said liability by suit filed within five years after they pay for said improvements.....	1087
3. motion to set aside judgment denying recovery on apportionment warrant and to file exhibits was made in time in circuit court having continuous session.....	1149
4. action on written contract with the city for street improvements is not barred until after fifteen years.....	1153
5. property holder in first class city not liable on apportionment warrant for street improvement where his lots do not front the improvement and the contiguous territory is not defined into squares by principal streets.....	1198
6. in particular case city alone is liable for street improvement.....	1198
7. property in certain quarter of a square properly subjected to claim for street improvement.....	1401
8. recovery against city by contractor for reconstruction of streets....	1491
9. contractor may recover for benefit of property holders who had made payment under promise to refund.....	1491
10. payment to contractor by property holder under such promise not payment for the city.....	1491
11. recovery on written contract for street improvement not barred until after fifteen years.....	1499
12. proper allegations and proof to sustain recovery on apportionment warrant for street improvement.....	1524
13. ordinance directing improvement of Grand avenue in Louisville at cost of property owners valid.....	1988
14. annexation by a city of territory laid out into streets and lots is sufficient acceptance of streets and dedication to public use.....	2209
15. street improvements properly chargeable to lot owners on basis of such streets being dedicated to the city.....	2209
16. claim for street improvement not invalid because plans and specifications altered after advertisement for bids.....	2209
17. authority of board of public works to change details of work properly exercised.....	220

STREET IMPROVEMENTS—Continued—		Page.
18.	guarantee of pavement for five years by contractor was beneficial to city...	2228
19.	ordinance requiring payment of license fee by contractor for street improvements is unconstitutional .....	2228
20.	objector to fairness of apportionment of assessment for street improvement should show that under his proposed plan he would pay less than under the plan adopted.....	2228
21.	question as to propriety of subjecting agricultural lands to street improvement depends on facts of each case....	2228
22.	such property properly subjected in particular case....	2228
23.	property owner standing by and permitting street improvement estopped to deny liability for same .....	2228
24.	judgment against city for improvement of particular street was proper .....	2255
25.	abutting property is not liable for street improvement where cost of improvement equals or exceeds value of property.....	2263
26.	city is liable to contractor for cost of such improvement.....	2263
27.	city can not relieve itself by contract from liability for such improvement.....	2263
28.	claim against property owner for cost of street improvement enforced as assessment fairly made .....	2279
29.	property owner who complains of assessment of property for street improvement must show that method he proposes would cost him less than the method adopted .....	2284, 2346, 2348
30.	no error in assessment on property for street improvement in particular case .....	2294
31.	ordinance providing for street improvement construed as fixing liability of property owners under law then in existence .....	2312
32.	property of defendant not within improvement limit improperly subjected to lien for street improvement .....	2368
33.	where cost of street improvement equals or exceeds value of property, the property can not be subjected to the debt.....	2368
34.	such a requirement equivalent to a personal judgment .....	2368
35.	subjecting property under such condition is confiscation.....	2368
36.	proper assessment of property for improvement of Von Borries avenue .....	2380
37.	claim for such improvement could not cross a principal street....	2380
38.	claim for lien on abutting property for street improvement not invalid on alleged ground that street was not one of the highways of the city .....	2433
39.	public highway established by fifteen years' recognition and use .....	2433
40.	injunction properly refused to prevent extension of Southern avenue in Latonia .....	2476
41.	lien for street improvement on abutting property on Floyd street in Louisville enforced as proof shows dedication to the public....	2478
42.	counterclaim for damages for failure to complete street improvement in time properly refused where land owner had been paid such damages .....	2478
STREET RAILWAYS—See Negligence, 11, 12; Sheriff, 3—
1.	degree of care required in operating electric cars at a high rate of speed over streets of crowded city.....	1278
2.	they are bound to exercise more than ordinary care .....	1279
3.	verdict for damages not flagrantly against the evidence in particular case .....	1279
4.	instruction properly given authorizing recovery of damages for permanent injury to lady while getting off electric car.....	1527
5.	$1,000 damages for permanent injury to ankle not excessive .....	1527
6.	liability of railway company for damages for injuries sustained by plaintiff by being run over by electric car at street crossing.....	1700
7.	not error to refuse instruction requiring appellee to look and listen for an approaching car.....	1700
8.	defective petition for malicious prosecution for failure to pay street car fare .....	1825
9.	street railway liable for injuries to person on its track from negligence in running over him.....	2365
10.	degree of care required of motorman to prevent injury in such case.....	2365
11.	erroneous instruction as to contributory negligence of person injured .....	2365
12.	proper instruction as to degree of care required of motorman to permit passenger to alight in safety.....	2419

SUBROGATION —See Fraudulent Conveyances, 7—	Page.
1. a party becomes entitled to be subrogated to a debt when the creditor accepts his obligation for it in the place of the original obligation.....	1199
2. rule as to subrogation to debts.....	1200
SURETY —See Attachment, 2; Bills and Notes, 10, 11; Burden of Proof, 4; Guardian and Ward, 1, 2, 3; Parties to Actions, 6; Pleading, 31; Sheriff, 3, 5—
1. surety on supersedeas bond released from liability for debt by sheriff levying execution on property of the debtor sufficient to pay the debt .....	1151
2. lien on said property enures to the benefit of the surety.....	1151
3. surety on official bond of sheriff not liable for county taxes collected in excess of the constitutional limit .....	1297
4. liability of surety on such bonds measured by the terms of the bond.....	1297
5. where surety gives his individual note to satisfy the debt he may purge the debt of all usurious interest paid by either him or the principal .....	1720
6. delay by surety of seven years before filing amendment claiming credits estops him from asserting same.....	1844
7. release of prisoner charged with offense under indictment sufficient consideration to bind surety on bond .....	2257
8. proof fails to show any indulgence to principal which would release surety .....	2425
TAXATION —See Appeals, 9; Parties to Actions, 7; Res Judicata, 5—
1. correct method of assessment of bridge property partly within and partly without the State for franchise taxes.....	1177
2. State Board of Valuation and Assessment can not adopt a method of assessment that will estop a subsequent board from adopting a different method.....	1177
3. mandamus lies to compel county judge to hear and determine liability of railroad company for taxation on motion of auditor's agent .....	1197
4. but not to control his judgment in the matter.. ..	1197
5. an appeal lies from his determination in such matter.....	1197
6. a dismissal of the action by county judge for want of jurisdiction is not a judgment determining whether the property was liable to assessment or not.....	1197
7. building and loan association not liable for taxes on notes and mortgages held by it since June 23, 1894.....	1228
8. a lien for taxes can not be enforced against property which has been transferred more than five years.....	1339
9. but the statute does not limit the time within which a lien for taxes shall be enforced against the owner .....	1340
10. taxes do not become due until after assessment.....	1340
11. action to recover taxes are barred five years after assessment .....	1340
12. personal property is only subject to taxation in county of owner's residence .....	1780
13. sufficiency of description of omitted personal property in information filed by auditor's agent .....	2005, 2042
14. question as to sufficiency of description only available on motion to make more specific .....	2005, 2042
15. such objection not reached by demurrer .....	2005
16. personal liability of curators for taxes on property omitted to be assessed by them .....	2006
17. a bridge belonging to a railroad company has no franchise separate from the franchise of the railway subject to taxation.....	2124
18. right to assess omitted property is limited to five years from time it should have been assessed.. ..	2124, 2138
19. where State is a party to a proceeding to recover taxes case can not be removed to Federal court .....	2124
20. right of removal to Federal court does not apply to tax proceedings.....	2124
21. tax proceedings can not be brought in a Federal court.....	2124
22. a proceeding to assess property is an action within the meaning of the statute .....	2138
23. sufficient description of personal property in information to assess same. ....	2147
24. objection to sufficiency of description should be raised by motion to make more specific and not by demurrer .....	2147

TAXATION—Continued—

Page.

25. heirs liable for taxes on property received from ancestor to extent of property received. .... 2147
26. sufficient compliance with the law relating to assessment of railroads for taxation. .... 2178

TELEGRAPH COMPANIES—

1. liability for negligence of telegraph company in delivery of message announcing death of plaintiff's mother. .... 1488
2. proper instruction fixing measure of damages in such cases .... 1488
3. liability of telegraph company for negligence in delivery of message announcing death of plaintiff's son .... 2008
4. proper instruction in such case. .... 2008

TELEPHONES—

1. privilege given by city to telephone company not exclusive .... 1676
2. second telephone company granted such privilege may enjoin first company from obstructing operation of its lines. .... 1676
3. that second company is a foreign corporation will not prevent it from obtaining an injunction. .... 1676
4. such objection only available in a direct proceeding by the government .... 1677
5. telephone company has no authority under the Constitution to construct its line through a city without permission from the council. .... 2358
6. liability for death of an employe killed by wire coming in contact with electric light wire through negligence of employe in charge of the work .... 2520
7. proper instruction as to degree of care required of telephone companies to avoid injuries from electricity. .... 2520

TITLE—See Appeals, 1—

1. appellee having had adverse possession of land for about twenty years has a better title than appellant. .... 1539
2. an action in trespass to try title to land involving location of boundary line, instruction should be confined to issue. .... 1571
3. appellant has no title to land where his vendor has previously conveyed it to another. .... 1636
4. owner of mineral rights in land can properly maintain action to quiet his title where his rights are reserved in a deed. .... 1658
5. owner of the surface nor his vendee can claim same. .... 1658
6. title under patent granted in 1846 superior to title under patent of 1881 where junior patentee does not show possession. .... 1691
7. action to quiet title not maintainable where notes and mortgage executed by plaintiff alleged to be without consideration and fraudulent. .... 1842
8. action to cancel on the ground of fraud is transitory. .... 1842
9. where such notes were executed in Shelby county, where land lies, circuit court of that county has no jurisdiction unless process served in that county. .... 1842
10. in action involving title to land peremptory instruction for defendant properly given where plaintiff failed to produce deed under which he claimed. .... 1949
11. in same action particular map incompetent evidence. .... 1949
12. proof insufficient to show that survey was made and patent obtained by father for benefit of his son. .... 2272
13. son incompetent to testify as to declaration of his deceased father as affecting title. .... 2272
14. possession of land under title from father since 1844 not disturbed. .... 2272
15. 100-acre survey included in general description of larger tract. .... 2272
16. in particular case appellees had the better title. .... 2282
17. finding of fact by chancellor on question of title given some weight. .... 2281
18. inchoate right of dower in land no objection to title as purchaser can obtain indemnity on covenant of warranty. .... 2322
19. defendants in action for trespass protected by fifteen years' possession. .... 2362
20. claim for land and growing timber in action to quiet title to land rests upon covenant of warranty. .... 2416
21. petition failing to allege that there was a warranty, presumption is against the pleader. .... 2416

TRESPASS—

- owner of land not in the actual possession may maintain action to recover damages for a trespass .... 2189

TRUSTS—See Assignment for Benefit of Creditors, 4, 5, 6, 7; Husband and Wife, 16, 17, 18; Wills, 2—

- |  |       |
|--|-------|
|  | Page. |
| 1. a widow under the will of her husband had authority to make successive appointment of trustees . . . . .  | 1313  |
| 2. trustee and cestui que trust had authority to sell property . . . . .   | 1313  |
| 3. a trustee appointed to hold and deliver county bonds on certain conditions entitled to compensation for his trouble; also to an allowance for attorney's fees . . . . . | 1369  |
| 4. trustee authorized to employ an attorney to advise him in the management of the trust . . . . .   | 1369  |
| 5. said trustee had the right to institute action in circuit court to ascertain his duties, settle the trust and have allowances made . . . . .                            | 1369  |
| 6. not necessary that trustee should have first applied to fiscal court for allowance of compensation . . . . .  | 1369  |
| 7. not presumed that trustee of such an important trust should have assumed to perform his duties without compensation . . . . .   | 1369  |
| 8. allowance of $4,000 to trustee approved . . . . .  | 1369  |

TURNPIKES—

- |   |      |
|---|------|
| 1. judgment for compensation for condemnation of turnpike increased from $16,000 to $20,000 under the evidence . . . . .          | 1260 |
| 2. turnpike company is liable for injury caused by plaintiff's horse breaking through defective bridge and injuring rider . . . . . | 1341 |
| 3. duty of company to inspect such bridge and know its condition . . . . .  | 1341 |
| 4. peremptory instruction for defendant improperly given . . . . .  | 1341 |

USURY—See Building and Loan Associations, 2, 3; Surety, 5—

- |   |      |
|---|------|
| 1. usury properly deducted from notes . . . . .   | 1354 |
| 2. amount paid by obligors of notes for indulgence of time to file answers is not the payment of usury . . . . .  | 1486 |
| 3. usurious interest included in notes made by original debtor can not be recovered by his personal representative or heirs after they have made a new transaction fully satisfying the original indebtedness . . . . . | 1486 |
| 4. usury embraced in renewal notes executed by them after the novation properly allowed the heirs . . . . .   | 1486 |
| 5. where surety in settlement of debt of his principal executes his own note for same he may recover all usury paid during existence of debt while he was surety . . . . .  | 1558 |
| 6. in suit on one note containing usury, the usury paid on former notes more than twelve months before can not be deducted . . . . .  | 1928 |
| 7. the rule is the same although all the notes were executed as part of same contract . . . . .   | 1928 |

VENUE—See Criminal Law, 21, 41.

VERDICT—See Bills and Notes, 16; Negligence, 16; Passway, 4.

WARRANTY—See Champerty, 1, 2, 3; Title, 20, 21—

- |  |      |
|--|------|
| 1. measure of damages on breach of warranty where a strip taken for a street . . . . .   | 1266 |
| 2. assessment list not competent evidence in such case . . . . .   | 1267 |
| 3. the assessor would be a competent witness in fixing its valuation . . . . .   | 1267 |
| 4. same evidence admissible on suit for breach of warranty as would be admissible where city seeks to condemn it . . . . .     | 1266 |
| 5. contract of warranty of threshing machine and straw stacker did not extend to engine purchased from another party . . . . . | 1862 |

WILLS—See Evidence, 13, 28, 36, 37; Homestead, 2, 3—

- |   |      |
|---|------|
| 1. interest on legacy should be calculated from the time it is due, applying payments first to the satisfaction of the interest due . . . . .                           | 1122 |
| 2. after devising estate to children absolutely, expression of request that the devisees shall devise same in a particular way does not create a trust . . . . .        | 1165 |
| 3. particular clause of will does not exclude grandchildren from interest of deceased children . . . . .  | 1167 |
| 4. a bequest for masses for the repose of the testator and his relatives is valid . . . . .   | 1248 |
| 5. a bequest of $3,000, the income of which is to be applied in rewards of merit to children in the parochial schools of Louisville, is valid . . . . .                | 1249 |
| 6. a bequest of $3,000, to be applied by a bishop to any charitable uses he may desire, is too indefinite . . . . .  | 1249 |
| 7. a bequest of 100 acres of land to the Society of Jesus, known as the Jesuit Order, is too indefinite as it is not to an identified or ascertainable object . . . . . | 1249 |

WILLS—Continued—

	Page.
8. the extent to which the statute of Elizabeth and the doctrine of cypras exists in this State in the construction of wills.....	1248
9. a bequest of the residue of an estate to be invested and placed in trust with the bishop of the Catholic diocese of Louisville and three others for the establishment of a home for poor Catholic men is sufficiently definite to be enforced.....	1249
10. executor charged with the care and custody of testator's daughter guilty of neglect in finding and caring for her.....	1331
11. legacy misappropriated by executor.....	1331
12. under particular will a son was given a defeasible fee, subject to be defeated by his death without living issue before his mother..	1618
13. the son having survived his mother, conveyed a fee-simple title to his vendee .....	1618
14. same rule applies in appeals from verdicts in will cases as in other cases .....	1749
15. verdict against a will palpably against the evidence .....	1749
16. extent to which statements of testator are admissible as evidence of undue influence.....	1749
17. acts and declarations of husband of testatrix competent to support contention of contestants as to undue influence .....	1749
18. objections to questions propounded to husband as to statements made by him to his wife, the testatrix, improperly sustained. ...	1749
19. a daughter-in-law given all the real and personal estate not entitled to houses and lots purchased by testator after making will.	1790
20. rule as to ademption of legacy only applies to heirs of testator ....	1790
21. under particular will wife of testator vested with fee-simple title to all the estate.....	1965
22. wife of testator entitled to life estate in land against claim of her daughter-in-law for alimony and the claim of purchase from her son.....	1987
23. vacant lot not included in devise of particular property.....	2031
24. parol evidence admissible to show latent defect in will as to lot intended by devise.. ..	2031
25. where joint devise to wife and child—favored rule to construe devise to wife as for life only.....	2110
26. executors given full authority under will to sell and convey real estate .....	2115
27. where a joint devise of property is made to two persons, with directions that it should pass to others in case they died without children, on death of one his heirs inherit his share .....	2164
28. on probate of will not competent to consider that devise was void for uncertainty .....	2217
29. such questions can be raised only in suit to put it in operation....	2218
30. under particular will daughter of testator entitled to fee-simple title. ....	2246
31. the policy of the law is to treat all estates as vested.....	2246
32. on failure of charitable bequest to take effect property reverted to heirs of testator in fee simple .....	2310
33. heir by devise vested his devisee with a fee simple title.....	2310
34. a devise of the "home farm on which I now reside, known as the Drenan farm," did not include 111 acres adjoining purchased after the will was written.....	2403
35. devisee should not be credited in settlement of estate with taxes paid on his individual property.....	2403
36. taxes paid on decedent's estate should be credited on rents collected.....	2403
37. a request made in the will, that a devisee should dispose of his estate in a particular way, does not create a trust.....	2458
38. probate of will properly refused after eleven years from death of testator.....	2485
39. personal property held in trust for the benefit of testator's daughter construed to belong absolutely to the daughter ..	2500
40. on her death it passed to her husband and was subject to their debts .....	2500
41. a devisee holding property until his son arrived at the age of twenty-one years may devise same to his wife until that time....	2517

5-2-20

